INTRODUCTION.

OF THE great cycles of mediaeval romance none was more popular throughout Europe than the Arthurian cycle. From the first introduction of the Arthurian legends into French literature they caught the popular favour, and stimulated writers to an unwonted activity for a period embracing a well-rounded century, beginning toward the middle of the twelfth century and ending before the close of the thirteenth.<sup>1</sup>

In the history of the cycle we may distinguish with more or less accuracy three periods<sup>2</sup>—a period of preparation, a period of production, a period of translation and imitation. To the first period belongs the work of the Welsh bards and the pseudo-historic Latin chroniclers, Nennius and Geoffrey of Monmouth. To the second period belongs the work of the French romancers. To the third period belongs the work of translators and imitators in England and in the north and south of Europe.

In each of the romances the interest centres in a very small group of characters; so that what the story lacks in breadth it makes up in minuteness of detail. The earlier forms of the romances contain two figures that stand out most clearly—Arthur the King and Merlin the Enchanter. So great an interest attaches to these two names that we learn with some surprise that there is no adequate treatment in any language of the origin and development of the romances dealing with Arthur and Merlin. But there are two facts that have especially hindered the solution of the numerous problems involved in a history of the Arthurian romances: first, the vagueness and paucity of the earlier sources; and, secondly, the wide range of the later materials, which demand if they are to be satisfactorily treated an extensive and critical acquaintance with the French and Celtic literatures. Such an equipment is possessed by scarcely anyone who has thus far discussed the subject, and is expressly disclaimed by some of the most eminent investigators of portions of the Arthurian cycle.

Especial difficulties in the way of a demonstrable conclusion with regard both to the origin of the legend of Merlin and the development of the prose romance from earlier sources, meet the student at the beginning of his investigation and attend every step of his way. An initial difficulty appears in the chronology of the possible sources. We do not really know how much older any of the extant Welsh literature is than Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae (1135-47), to say nothing of the ninth-century Nennius.<sup>1</sup> As Mr. Nutt well observes: "The study of Celtic tradition is only beginning to be placed upon a firm basis, and the stores of Celtic myth and legend are only beginning to be thrown open to the non-Celtic scholar." A little further on he adds that "as a whole Welsh literature is late, meagre, and has kept little that is archaic."<sup>2</sup> If this be true of Welsh literature as a whole, still more is it true of the portions available for our purpose. Even after including all the poems, spurious and genuine alike, that assume the existence of Myrddin, we have only a few lines with which to construct a portrait. But when we are compelled to reject much of this material as late and untrustworthy, we can with difficulty resist the feeling that it is hardly worth while to thresh the old straw until we have some new data upon which to base an opinion, or until Celtic scholars agree somewhat more generally as to the meaning of the scattered fragments that we do possess.

There is now a very general agreement with regard to the chronological order and authorship of most of the Latin sources; but their origin is still obscure, and the interpretation of them by no means harmonious.

In the French romances we find more abundant material, but we are left in almost hopeless confusion as to the exact order in which the several French versions of the prose romance were produced. The partial copying of the romance by those who were at once copyists and authors, and the retention of allusions to passages of the original romance—passages afterwards dropped from most of the versions—would be quite enough to throw us off the track. Then, too, romances that in all probability were written later than the original prose Merlin are by the aid of interpolated passages made to seem earlier works than the Merlin. As to the authors of the various prose versions of the Merlin, nothing is known and probably nothing ever will be known. We are obliged, therefore, to content ourselves with a perhaps where certainty would be most desirable. If we possessed all the Celtic literature that ever existed, Welsh poems, Breton lais, all the Latin sources, and all the French romances in prose and verse, with authentic dates and the names of the authors, we should still have an almost interminable task in attempting to follow out the tangled threads of the romances. But, as already remarked, these favourable conditions are lacking. The Welsh literature—the only Celtic source that we can seriously consider—is scanty and of not too convincing antiquity. The origin of the Latin sources is doubtful; and even the Latin sources at most provide an explanation for only a portion of the romance. The French versions (with two or three exceptions) bear no date, and afford scarcely any guide to the chronology. The manuscripts are numerous and still unclassified as to age and generic relations. Only two manuscripts of the Merlin<sup>1</sup> have been published, unless we include the early printed editions of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. These old printed versions, it is needless to say, are exceedingly rare as well as uncritical, presenting a later, modernized text, and taking numerous liberties with the earlier versions.

These difficulties might be dwelt upon at greater length, but enough has been advanced to show the necessity of extreme caution in our assertions. Nothing final can be established with regard to the development of the romance until we possess a critical text, not only of the Merlin, but of all the other prose romances of the Arthurian cycle with which it is interwoven, and until a number of special researches have been made concerning the age of the manuscripts, the extent of the interpolated passages, and the meaning of the allusions to other romances. And even then we may seriously question whether a thoroughly consistent history of this or of any of the other romances of the Arthurian cycle can ever be written.

In taking leave of the questions that have occupied me so long, I regret to be obliged to confess that I have been able to add so little to what was already known. The account of the French manuscripts is new, and I trust will prove not altogether valueless. New also is a considerable part of the history of the legend in English literature, as well as other portions that need not be specified. Throughout the whole work I have tried to be useful rather than original, and to present no theories unsupported by a large basis of facts. If once we can get a firm foundation of fact for the history of the romances, there will be abundant time for constructing theoretical explanations of the missing links.

I had originally intended to discuss the dialect and the grammatical forms of the Merlin, and to point out in detail the extent to which the structure of the sentences has been modified by the French original. But the fact that the entire romance as printed by the Early English Text Society had to be collated once more with the English manuscript, compelled me to defer that portion of the work, and to confine my attention almost wholly to literary questions. After the collations arrived I found that an adequate treatment of the language of the romance would unduly delay the publication of the other portion of the work. I have, therefore, attempted nothing more than to cite a few of the countless instances where French words have been transferred almost without change to the English translation.

It is perhaps unnecessary to remark that without the aid of the researches of Francisque Michel, Paulin Paris, Gaston Paris, H. L. D. Ward, Alfred Nutt, and others, a considerable part of this outline could not have been written. So much, too, remains yet to be done in the way of special investigation of the Arthurian romances, that I can at most regard this account as a mere passing contribution to the history of the Merlin legend. If this sketch can in any way serve to incite other scholars to a more careful study of French romance in its relations to our older English literature, I shall welcome the day when my own work is superseded.

It remains for me sincerely to thank those who have in any way aided in these researches. I owe much to the Director of the Bibliothèque de Ste. Geneviève, and the keepers of the MSS.

in the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal and the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris; to M. Paul Meyer, Director of the École des Chartes, who made several suggestions about the French MSS.; to Mr. H. L. D. Ward, of the Department of MSS. in the British Museum, who discussed with me the earlier forms of the legend and read some of the proof; to my colleague Professor L. Oscar Kuhns, who read a portion of the proof, and translated Professor Novati's note on Arthur's fight with the great cat of Lausanne; to Mr. E. G. B. Phillimore, who read the proofs of the chapter on the early forms of the legend, and supplied several valuable notes; and most of all to Dr. F. J. Furnivall, who furnished me while in Paris with several much needed books, and has since attended to numerous details that could not easily be superintended at a distance of three thousand miles.

I may add that the proofs of all the extracts from the French manuscripts have been read in Paris while I have been in America, so that the accuracy of the specimens is to be credited to the MS. reader rather than to me.

The greater portion of the present investigation was completed in 1892, and placed in the hands of the printers. Numerous delays, which need not be explained here, have hindered the appearance of the book until now. The supplementary notes on pp. ccl-ccliv take account of later work on various matters connected with the Merlin legend. But the most important part of the following discussion—the account of the MSS.—is quite independent of any work that has recently appeared.—W. E. M.

This list aims merely to indicate some of the more important books to be consulted by students wishing to test the conclusions reached in this investigation. The attempts to treat in detail the history of the Merlin legend are few, and, so far as English is concerned, are confined to a few essays and incidental discussions. Nor can all the books on the subject be used with entire confidence. Wright and Michel's introduction to the Vita Merlini contains much valuable matter, but some of the critical conclusions, notably those relating to the authorship of the Vita Merlini, are now almost universally abandoned. A similar criticism applies to much of San-Marte's work. Celtic scholarship has made great advances since his day, and rendered obsolete much of the Celtic discussion in his books. His Welsh texts are hopelessly corrupt, and the translations inaccurate. Villemarqué's work is marred by fantastic speculation, and the endeavour to make facts square with a preconceived theory. His Myrddhin may be safely recommended to anyone who prefers not to see the facts as they are. Mr. Nash's essay leaves untouched a large number of important questions, and settles the rest dogmatically. In the work of M. Paulin Paris we must recognize what is on the whole the best general account that we possess. He devoted many years of a long life to the study of the Arthurian romances and the MSS. in which they are contained. In treating the Merlin, he could not within his limits answer all the questions suggested, but he showed in a multitude of instances in what relation the Merlin stands to the other romances of the Arthurian cycle, and put all future investigators under lasting obligations. M. de la Borderie's work shows care and scholarship, but several of his conclusions are not convincing. Mr. H. L. D. Ward's Catalogue of Romances is critical and cautious. He discusses the Merlin legend only incidentally in enumerating the MSS. in the British Museum, but his remarks on Geoffrey of Monmouth are perhaps the best that have yet appeared. The introduction to the Huth Merlin by M. Gaston Paris—the foremost authority in France on the Arthurian romances—is avowedly a mere sketch, but no student of the Merlin legends can afford to leave it unread. Kölbing's introduction to the Arthour and Merlin aims chiefly at showing the relation of the verse romance to the other Merlin romances. Dr. Sommer points out in detail the relation of Malory's Morte Darthur to the prose Merlin. The slight inaccuracies in his account are chiefly due to insufficient study of the French MSS. of Merlin, and are pardonable enough in view of the vast field to be covered. Prof. Rhys transfers to cloud-land and to myth most of the characters of the Arthurian romances. His Studies are learned and ingenious, if not always convincing, and of great value in throwing light upon the Celtic side of the Arthurian cycle, but they touch only a few of the questions that most concern us here.<sup>1</sup>

THE STORY OF MERLIN.

CHAPTER I.

AFTER our Lord saved the world from hell (1) the fiends in wrath hold a great council to get back what they have lost (2), and resolve to cause the birth of a man who shall do their will. The fiend who suggests the plan hastens at once to the evil wife of a rich man with three daughters and a son (3), kills by her advice the cattle and horses, strangles the son, makes the woman hang herself, and so causes the rich man to die of grief (4). Of the three daughters, one is seduced and condemned to be buried alive (5), another becomes a common woman (7), while the eldest, after resisting various temptations for two years, is finally deceived one night by the devil in her sleep (10).

In her distress she goes to her spiritual adviser (10), who at first gives no great credence to her story (11), but afterwards saves her from being burned alive (13). The maiden is then shut up in a strong tower till her child is born (14), whom she calls Merlin (15). The boy frightens the women by his ugliness, and astonishes them with his knowledge (16). When the mother with her child is brought to trial (17), Merlin confounds the judge and delivers his mother (21). Then, as the story says, they go where they please; but Merlin and the hermit Blase discourse together, till finally Merlin asks Blase to make a book of what shall be told him (22). Blase consents, and when he is ready, Merlin begins to tell of the love of Jesus Christ, and of Joseph of Arimathia, and of Pieron, and the end of Joseph and his companions (23).

CHAPTER II.

KING VORTIGER AND HIS TOWER.

MERLIN further tells Blase of the men who are coming to put him (Merlin) to death, and says that he will go with them, but when they have heard him speak they will not want to slay him (23). Now in the land of Britain was a Christian king named Constance, who had three sons, Moyne, Pendragon, and Uter. At the death of Constance Moyne becomes king, and Vortiger, a worldly-wise man, is made his steward (24). Vortiger wins the hearts of the people, and when Moyne is defeated in battle by the heathen, and afterwards slain by his angry barons, the steward receives the crown (25). At this Moyne's two brothers, Pendragon and Uter, are prudently taken to Gaul. Vortiger hypocritically assumes his own innocence, puts to death the murderers of Moyne (26), and when warred upon by their friends gains the victory over them. Then for fear of the sons of Constance he orders his workmen to build a mighty tower as a refuge (27). The work is begun, but as soon as the walls are a few fathoms high they fall in ruins. Vortiger therefore commands his wise men to tell why the tower does not stand (28). After much delay they agree to tell Vortiger that the blood of a child, seven years old, born without a father, must be put in the foundation of the tower. Of twelve messengers sent out (29), four chance to meet, and while passing through a field near a town where children are playing, they see Merlin, who strikes another boy with his staff (30). The child cries and weeps, and calls Merlin a "misbegotten wretch, and fatherless."

At the questions of the messengers Merlin laughs and says: "I am he that ye seek, and he that ye be sworn ye should slay, and bring my blood to King Vortiger." Then the boy takes the messengers to Blase and corrects the account that they render of their errand (31). After this Merlin sends Blase to Northumberland, and promises to visit him there, bringing materials for the Book of the Saint-Graal (32). Merlin then departs with the messengers. On the way he sees a churl with a pair of strong shoes and leather to mend them (33). Merlin laughs, for the fellow will die before reaching home. A little farther on he laughs again at a man weeping over his dead son, though the child is really the son of the priest (34). On coming to Vortiger, Merlin tells why the messengers have sought him, and says that the clerks have not told the truth (36). Then he confronts the clerks, who are dreading to lose their lives, and explains why the tower cannot stand (37). Under the tower is a great water, and under the water two dragons, one red and the other white, and above them two great flat stones. The labourers uncover the dragons, who at once begin to fight (38), and continue till the white dragon burns up the red. Merlin explains that King Vortiger is the red dragon, and that his end is nigh (40).

CHAPTER III.

THE DEFEAT OF VORTIGER BY PENDRAGON AND UTER; THEIR SEARCH AFTER MERLIN; THE BATTLE OF SALISBURY AND THE DEATH OF PENDRAGON; AND THE FOUNDATION OF THE ROUND TABLE AT CARDOELL, IN WALES.

MEANWHILE Pendragon and Uter are coming in fulfilment of the prophecy. Merlin slips away to visit Blase (41), while Vortiger is burnt in his castle by Pendragon (42), who becomes king. While besieging Aungier, Pendragon hears of Merlin and sends in search of him. Merlin, as usual, knows all that is going on, and appears at first to the messengers as a beggar. They take him for the Devil, because he knows all their plans (43). A little later Merlin appears under several disguises to Pendragon himself, and announces the death of Aungier at the hands of Uter (44). At length he assumes his real form (45), and shortly after leaves the King in order to return to Blase (46). Eleven days later Merlin comes to court in the form of a boy messenger from Uter's mistress (47), and afterwards appears in his real form. The two brothers ask Merlin to abide with them, and to assist them at all times (48). He agrees to help them when they have need, and so takes his leave (49). Shortly afterwards Merlin tells the King how to take a castle he is besieging, and how to rid his land of the Sarazins (50). The plan is successful, and the land is freed.

Notwithstanding Merlin's services there is a baron at court who envies him and resolves to prove the falsity of his divinations (51). The baron feigns illness, disguises himself in three different ways, and with each disguise asks Merlin what death he is to die. Merlin replies that he will break his neck, that he will be hanged, and that he will be drowned (52). The baron calls Merlin a fool, but the prophecy is fulfilled to the letter. Then Merlin goes to Blase. But the King and all who hear thereof say there is nowhere so wise a man as Merlin, and they resolve to write down all that he says. In this way is begun the Book of the Prophecies of Merlin (53).<sup>1</sup>

When Merlin returns to court, he advises the King to make a great feast, and to prepare for the arrival of the Sarazins (54). He does so, and goes out to meet the enemy at Salisbury (56). All the Sarazins are killed, but Pendragon falls as Merlin has prophesied. Uter buries the dead Christians, and is then crowned at Logres (57). Merlin, who has meanwhile revisited Blase, returns to the King, constructs a golden dragon as a rallying point in battle, and brings over from Ireland the great stones of Stonehenge (58). Then Merlin tells the King the story of the Grail and of the tables of our Lord and of Joseph of Arimathia, and advises him to construct at Cardoell in Wales a third table in the name of the Trinity (59).

CHAPTER IV.

THE FEASTS AT CARDOELL; UTER-PENDRAGON'S LOVE FOR YGERNE, AND HIS WAR WITH HER HUSBAND THE DUKE OF TINTAGEL.

THE King follows the advice of Merlin, who selects fifty knights to sit at the table, and leaves one place void (60). Then Merlin departs and goes to Blase (61). Three years pass before he returns to court; and the rumour spreads that Merlin is dead (62). At Pentecost great feasts are held at Cardoell. A doubting knight sits in the void place and sinks down like lead (63). Then Merlin comes to court, and advises the King to hold all high feasts at Cardoell. Among the guests are the Duke of Tintagel and his wife Ygerne (64). The King is struck with her beauty, and sends jewels to all the ladies at the feast. At Easter is another feast, and the King repeats his gifts. When all the guests have departed, the King's anguish increases because of his hopeless love for Ygerne. Soon he ordains another feast (65), and sends by the hand of Bretel a golden cup to Ygerne (67). The lady reddens with shame, but the Duke, thinking no evil, orders her to receive it, and she obeys. After the feast the Duke finds her weeping, and learns of the designs of the King (68). Full of wrath he summons his men, and leaves the court without ceremony. The King is angry in his turn, and demands the return of the Duke (69), who refuses to come. Then the King invades the Duke's country (70). While the King is carrying on the war, Merlin appears as an old man (72), then as a blind cripple (73), and finally assumes his real form (74). Merlin promises to help the King to enjoy Ygerne on condition that the King will give him anything he may ask for (75). Then Merlin transforms the King, Ulfen, and himself into the semblance of the Duke, Jordan, and Bretel (76). They come to the castle of Tintagel, where the King spends the night with Ygerne, and in the morning they depart in haste (77). Merlin demands the child which shall be born of Ygerne, and the King consents. Then they ride on till they come to a river, where they wash and resume their own forms. When the King meets his men he learns of the death of the Duke, and says he is "right sorry" (78).

CHAPTER V.

MARRIAGE OF THE KING WITH YGERNE; BIRTH OF ARTHUR AND DEATH OF THE KING.

At a council it is decided that the King shall marry Ygerne (85). Her friends consent with tears of joy; and the King weds the lady twenty days after he had lain by her in her chamber (86). Months pass by, until one night the King asks Ygerne who is the father of the child she is bearing. She tells him that a man had lain with her in the semblance of the Duke. The King assures her that he is the father, and gets her to promise to dispose of the child as he shall ordain (87). In due time the child is born (90) and delivered to Antor, a worthy knight whom Merlin designates (91). The child is the famous Arthur.

For a long time Uter-Pendragon rules the land, till at length he falls in a "great sickness of the gout in hands and feet." Then the Danes rise against him. But by Merlin's advice the King is borne into the battle in a litter, and wins the victory (94). After this he divides his treasure, and after long illness dies and is buried with much pomp (95). As the land is left without heir, the barons and prelates of the church come together to take counsel who shall be their king.

CHAPTER VI.

ARTHUR MADE KING.

In their doubt all turn to Merlin, and ask him to seek out a man that may govern the realm (96). Says Merlin: "Let us wait till Yule, and pray to our Lord to send a rightful governor." They agree, and assemble in the church at Yule (97). After "making meekly their orisons to our Lord," they come out of the church, and see a great stone in which is fixed an anvil, and through the anvil a sword (98). The Archbishop explains that he who draws out the sword shall be king, and lets all the lords try in their turn for eight days (100). Last of all the boy Arthur comes to the stone and takes out the sword as lightly as though nothing had held it (104). The barons are not quite satisfied, and ask that the sword be left in the stone till Easter. When they are all assembled at Easter, they ask for a further delay till Pentecost (105), and so they wait till the Whitsuntide (106). Then on Whitsun even the Archbishop makes Arthur knight. On the morrow Arthur is arrayed in the royal vestments, and all go in procession to the stone, from which the young king draws out the sword. After he is consecrated and anointed, and the service is ended, they all look for the stone, but it has vanished. Thus is Arthur chosen king, and he holds the realm of Logres long in peace (107).

CHAPTER VII.

REVOLT OF THE BARONS ; AND DEFEAT OF THE SEVEN KINGS BY ARTHUR.

AFTER the middle of August Arthur holds a great court, to which come the kings of the neighbouring realms with their knights—King Loth of Orcanye, and King Urien of Gorre, a young king much praised in arms ; King Ventres of Garlot, the husband of one of Arthur's sisters ; King Carados Brenbras, lord of the land of Strangore and one of the knights of the Round Table ; King Aguysas of Scotland, a fresh young knight ; and after him King Ydiers with four hundred knights. Arthur receives them with great honour, and loads them with rich gifts, but they disdain his presents, and refuse to have him as their lord (108). Arthur escapes from their hands ; and fifteen days pass without event. Then Merlin enters the town, and is at once appealed to by the barons. Merlin tells them that the new king is more highly born than they, and advises them to send for Arthur, Ulfen, the counsellor of Uter-Pendragon, and Antor, the supposed father of Arthur (109). The barons consent. When the three arrive, the Archbishop begins to speak (110), but gives place to Merlin, who tells the whole story of the birth of Arthur (111), and of his being reared by Antor (112). The people are satisfied, but the barons declare that they will never have a bastard for king, and depart in great wrath to arm themselves (113). Merlin reasons with them, but to no purpose. Then he comforts Arthur (114), and advises him to help King Leodegan, who is at war with King Rion, the king of the Land of Giants and of the Land of Pastures (115). Arthur shall marry the daughter of King Leodegan. Before his departure, Arthur fills the fortresses with men and provisions, and makes ready against the barons. Merlin constructs a flaming dragon, sets it on a spear, and gives it to Kay to bear as a standard (116). When the battle begins Merlin casts his enchantments, and sets fire to the pavilions of the enemy. Then Arthur attacks them, and, though set upon by the seven kings all at once (118), he wins the victory, for neither horse nor man can endure against Arthur's sword Calibourne (120).

CHAPTER VIII.

THE MISSION OF ULFIN AND BRETEL TO KING BAN AND KING BORS.

AFTER Arthur's victory over the seven kings he returns to Cardoell. Then he provisions his castles, towns, and cities, and afterwards holds court at Logres, his chief city, 'that is now called London' (120). After dubbing three hundred knights he listens to the counsels of Merlin, who tells of his own wonderful birth and then of Arthur's. Queen Ygerne, says Merlin, had five daughters by the Duke of Tintagel, and two more by a previous husband. Of these maidens King Loth has married one; King Ventres of Garlot, another; King Urien, the third; Briadas, the fourth—now dead. The fifth is yet at school (121). King Loth has five sons, the eldest of whom is Gawein. King Ventres has a son named Galeshyn; and King Urien, a son named Ewein the Gaunt.

In Little Britain, continues Merlin, are two kings, who are brothers—Ban of Benoyk, and Bors of Gannes (122). They are warred upon by Claudas, an evil king, and ought to be allies of Arthur. After giving this advice Merlin says he will repair to forests and wildernesses, but will be at hand in case of need (123).

Arthur therefore sends Ulfin and Bretel to ask King Ban and King Bors to come to Logres at Hallowmass (124). The messengers find the two kings in the midst of war with Claudas, but in a great battle the brothers win the victory. Ulfin and Bretel ride direct to the castle of Trebes and ask for King Ban, but he is with his brother at Benoyk (125). As the messengers ride forth they are set upon by seven knights (126), but Ulfin and Bretel overcome them, and go their way (127). On their arrival at Benoyk (128), they announce their message (129) and receive the promise of the assistance of Ban and Bors (130).

CHAPTER IX.

THE VISIT OF KING BAN AND KING BORS TO ARTHUR; THE TOURNAMENT AT LOGRES.

WHILE the messengers are still absent Merlin tells Arthur that they are returning with the two kings, and advises him to receive them with honour (131). By Arthur's command the city of Logres is hung with cloths of silk, and the streets strewed with fine grass. Incense and myrrh are burned; and in the windows are many lights (132). Then the guests enter the minster in solemn procession, and return to the palace for the banquet (133). A grand tournament follows, in which Gifflet the son of Do, Lucas the butler, and Kay the steward, perform great deeds (135). When all is over the conversation turns upon the alliance; and Merlin tells the two kings that Arthur ought to be their lord (139).

CHAPTER X.

THE BATTLE BETWEEN ARTHUR AND THE REBEL KINGS AT BREDIGAN.

KING Ban and King Bors follow Merlin's advice and do homage to Arthur (140). Merlin gives them wise counsel, and tells of Gonnore, daughter of King Leodegan of Carmelide, and of King Rion who is warring against him, and urges them to spend a year or two with Leodegan (141). They agree, and begin to make great preparations.

Meanwhile, the seven kings who had been defeated at Clarion prepare to take vengeance on Arthur and his enchanter Merlin. In great force they advance, accompanied by four other kings and a duke, and engage in battle with Arthur and his allies in the forest of Bredigan. Thousands are left dead on the field, but the rebels are beaten, and forced to flee for their lives (165). Merlin then departs from Arthur and goes to Blase (166).

CHAPTER XI.

THE DOINGS OF KING ARTHUR AFTER THE BATTLE, AND HIS DEPARTURE FOR TAMELIDE (CARMELIDE).

AFTER the battle Arthur causes all the plunder to be put together in a heap, and then the three kings divide it among their followers (167). On the morrow, after they have feasted, they see a great churl coming through the meadows by the river with a bow in his hand. The fowls which he shoots he gives to King Arthur. No one knows the churl but Ulfen and Bretel (169), and they tell the King that it is Merlin.

Then there is joy in the King's heart, for he is sure that Merlin loves him (170).

CHAPTER XII.

THE RETURN OF THE REBEL KINGS TO THEIR CITIES, AND THEIR ENCOUNTER WITH THE SAXONS.<sup>1</sup>

WHILE Arthur and his followers abide at Bredigan in "joy and solace" till the Lenten season, the rebel kings return full of "sorrow and heaviness" to their own cities. While on their way they enter the city of Sorhant, a town of King Urien (171). Here they learn of the ravages of the Saxons (172). In consternation they hold a council and agree to help one another. They learn that Arthur and Ban and Bors have gone to the help of Leodegan, but that the fortresses are prepared for war (175). While the kings are making ready, and the Saxons have already arrived, we may turn for a moment to Galeshyn, son of King Ventres, and nephew to King Arthur (177). One day Galeshyn questions his mother about her parents and her brother Arthur. She tells him the whole story, and then he goes to his chamber resolved to be one of Arthur's knights, and sends a messenger to Gawein, asking to meet him at Newerk, the third day after Easter (178).

The rest of the chapter relates the story of Arthur's amour with his sister, Loth's wife, the fruit of which is Mordred (180); tells of Gawein the son of Loth, and how he questions his mother about Arthur and says that he will be made a knight only by Arthur (181-184); and gives a further account of the movements of the Saxons.

CHAPTER XIII.

GAWEIN and his brothers Agravayn, Gaharet, and Gaheries, meet Galeshyn at Newerk in Brochelonde (189). They engage in repeated battles with the Saxons, but finally arrive at Logres (201).

<sup>1</sup> I shall make no excuse for abridging as much as possible the intolerably prolix account of the wars with the Saxons. The story is in each case essentially the same. Each king when attacked assembles his men and delivers battle. Hosts are killed, and there is "battle grete and stour mortell," while Saxons are "slitte to the teth," but there is exceedingly little in the long-winded recital that can interest a modern reader.

CHAPTER XIV.

(CARMELIDE).

WHEN the three kings arrive at Tamelide Leodegan receives them well, though he does not know who they are (203). He accepts their proffered aid (204), and prepares his hosts to go out against the invaders of his land (205). As may be expected, Leodegan and his allies gain the victory (223). After the battles, the kings divide the spoil (224), and Leodegan gives a great feast. Gonnore, the daughter of the King, serves at table and wins the heart of Arthur (227), for of all the ladies in the Bloy Breteyne she is the wisest and the fairest and the best beloved except Helayn, the daughter of Pelles, who had the keeping of the Saint-Graal (229).

CHAPTER XV.

EXPLOITS OF THE REBEL KINGS AGAINST THE SAXONS.

THE Saxons sweep over the country with fire and sword and slay the inhabitants without pity, but the Britons resist like brave men and inflict terrible punishment upon the invaders. The battle still rages as the tale turns to speak of Merlin and Arthur (231-257).

CHAPTER XVI.

MERLIN'S JOURNEY TO LOGRES AND VISIT TO GAWAIN. ENCOUNTER BETWEEN THE CHILDREN AND ORIENX.

GREAT is the joy in the town of Toraise, in Tamelide, where Arthur is highly honoured by Leodegan and his daughter Gonnore (257). One day Merlin tells the three kings that he must return to Logres, but that he will be with them again before they have another battle (258). After visiting Blase (259), Merlin takes the form of an old man (261), and goes to Camelot, where Gawain and his brothers are awaiting the Saxons. The old man calls him a coward for not going to the help of Seigramore, the nephew of the Emperor of Constantinople, who has come to take arms of Arthur (263). Gawain leaps at once to horse and rides forth with four thousand men. When they draw near, they find Seigramore and the children giving fierce battle to the Saxons. The fresh warriors smite the Saxons (264), and Gawein unhorses Oriens their leader (265). Then they return with joy to Camelot (268), but the old man has departed, and they believe he has been slain (270).

CHAPTER XVII.

RAVAGES OF THE SAXONS IN THE LANDS OF KING CLARION AND DUKE ESCAM.

THE SAXONS make another descent, but are driven back with great loss, and Duke Escam sends half of the plunder to King Clarion (271-277).

CHAPTER XVIII.

ADVENTURES OF GAWEIN AND HIS FELLOWS AT ARONDELL IN CORNWALL.

GAWEIN, with an army of thirty thousand men, sets out for Bredigan (278). When he arrives, a churl, who of course is Merlin, gives him letters purporting to be from the sons of Urien (279), asking his aid; and Gawein at once leads out his men in six divisions (280). Meanwhile Ydiers and the two sons of Urien are routed by the Saxons. Then Gawein's company arrives, and after repeated fierce combats drives the Saxons from the field (294). Then comes an old man on horseback and says, "Gawein, return again and bring with thee all thy fellows into Arondell, for, lo! here come Saxons in great number, and we may not endure them" (294). Gawein follows his advice, and from the city walls looks down upon the Saxons (295). While Gawein and his followers are feasting that night, a knight in torn hauberk gallops up to the castle and cries out, "Who is the squire that dares follow me on an adventure?" Gawein answers, and asks which way he will go, but the knight replies vaguely, taunting him with cowardice.

Gawein says that though he die he will hold him company (297). With seven thousand men he sallies forth, and rides all day and night till he meets a squire on horseback with a child in a cradle. The squire says that he is fleeing with the child of King Loth, and that the mother is in the hands of the Saxons (298). Gawein gallops off, rescues his mother (299) and conducts her to Arondell and then to Logres (301). Do of Cardoell receives them with great honour, and tells Gawein that all the warnings have been given by Merlin, the best diviner that ever was or will be, and that Merlin had assumed the three forms under which Gawein had seen him (302).

CHAPTER XIX.

MERLIN'S MEETING WITH LEONCES. HIS ADVENTURES WITH NIMIANE.

AFTER Gawein has rescued his mother, the knight who brings him the news, and who is none other than Merlin, goes to Blase (303), relates all these things, prophesies darkly, and says that God has given him wit to accomplish the adventures of the Saint-Graal (304). After this, Merlin departs into the realm of Benoyk, and comes to Leonces, the Lord of Paerne (305). He warns the King of the coming war, and advises him to make ready against Claudas and Frolles. Merlin then leaves Leonces, and goes to see Nimiane, a maiden of great beauty, the daughter of Dionas (307). In the form of a fair young squire he meets her at a fountain in the forest (308), asks her who she is, and tells her that for her love he will show her wonderful things (309). Then he conjures up a company of knights and ladies, singing and dancing, and a fair orchard wherein is all manner of fruit and flowers (310). Nimiane asks him to teach her some of his skill, and promises him her love (311). At this Merlin tells her much, which she writes upon parchment; and then he joins the kings at Tamelide (312).

CHAPTER XX.

MEETING OF THE PRINCES AT LEICESTER; RETURN OF MERLIN TO THE COURT OF LEODEGAN; BETROTHAL OF ARTHUR AND GONNORE; AND GREAT BATTLE WITH KING RION AND THE GIANTS.

WHEN the rebel princes meet at Leicester, they agree to go out against the Saxons, and choose for their camp the banks of the Severn (313).

Meanwhile Merlin has returned to Toraise, in Tamelide, and advises the three kings—Ban, Bors, and Arthur—to go to Leodegan and bid him prepare for battle with King Rion (314). They do not fathom his dark prophecies (315), but they follow his counsel. Leodegan is greatly troubled at the invasion of his land (318); but Merlin comforts him, and tells him that his guest is King Arthur, and that the young King desires Gonnore for his queen (319). With joy Leodegan leads in his daughter, richly clad, and presents her to Arthur. After a night of feasting the King arrays his army for the battle (321). Gonnore herself helps Arthur to put on his armour, and receives a kiss for her reward (323). Then the host rides forth, surprises the army of Rion, and so begins the battle (324). Everywhere are fierce single combats, but the result of the battle is doubtful till Arthur encounters Rion, and finally puts him to flight (342-345). Then the Christians chase the giants, and so win the victory (357). With great spoil they return to Toraise, and then, after two days, Arthur takes leave of Gonnore, and, accompanied by Merlin and twenty thousand soldiers, passes into Benoyk. Ban sends a message to his brother King Bors, asking him to come to Bredigan (360).

CHAPTER XXI.

ADVENTURES OF BAN AND GUYNEBANS ; BORS' FIGHT WITH AMAUNT ; MEETING OF THE CHILDREN WITH KING ARTHUR.

KING Ban and his brother Guynebans enter the Forest Perilous, and there see knights and ladies in a meadow closed about with woods (361). For the love of a maiden Guynebans "makes dances to enter," and teaches her the secret of his enchantments. When Ban departs, Guynebans accompanies him, but afterwards returns to his lady, and abides with her all his life (363).

In obedience to the message of King Ban, King Bors sets out for Bredigan (364), and on the way engages in battle with King Amaunt, whom he kills in single combat (368). Accompanied by the knights of the dead king, he rides on to Bredigan, and there presents them to Arthur, to whom they do homage (369). After three days they go into the forest in search of a great treasure of which Merlin has told them. When it is found they all set out for Logres. As they are riding forth, Gawain and his company learn that Arthur and his host are near, and go to meet him. Merlin knows of their coming, and makes Arthur and the two kings "alight under a fair tree" to await them (370).

Gawein and his followers kneel before King Arthur, who commands them to rise and promises to knight them. Again they kneel and thank him (372), while Gawein tells his name, and presents his companions. Arthur makes Gawein constable of his household (373), and then all ride forth to Logres. That night the children hold vigil in the minster, and on the morrow they are dubbed by Arthur with his good sword Calibourne (374). After the great court which Arthur holds for three days, Merlin tells the King to make ready his host to move at midnight against the invaders of Benoyk. Gawein follows the King's commands, and when he enters again, he learns all that he has owed to Merlin (376). As the host makes ready the ships at Dover, Merlin departs for Northumberland, and recounts to Blase all that has happened (378).

CHAPTER XXII.

BATTLE BEFORE THE CASTLE OF TREBES.

IN the month of June Arthur and the two kings take ship and come to Rochelle. On the morrow at midday, Merlin joins them (379). Meanwhile the invaders gather about the castle of Trebes and besiege it on four sides (380). When Arthur and his host arrive there is a great battle, Merlin casts his enchantments and discomfits the enemy with flames of fire in the air, while Kay bears the dragon which vomits fire. Arthur and the two kings, and Gawein and the knights of the Round Table perform marvels, and finally chase the besiegers from the field (411).

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE DREAM OF THE WIFE OF KING BAN; THE DREAM OF JULIUS CÆSAR, EMPEROR OF ROME.

ALL the night there is feasting in the castle of Trebes (412). When the two kings Ban and Bors have gone to rest with their wives, Queen Helayne, the wife of King Ban, has a wonderful dream, which she relates to him (413). After the first mass, to which they both go, King Ban falls asleep and hears a voice speaking to him (415). He and the Queen fear greatly, but do not at once ask Merlin the meaning of the dreams. Arthur meanwhile ravages the lands of Claudas, who afterwards, however, conquers the two kings, but is finally driven out of the land by Arthur (416). One day Ban asks Merlin the meaning of the dreams. Merlin explains a part, and then goes to Nimiane his love (417). Meanwhile Gawein ravages the lands of Claudas, returns to Benoyk; and then with Arthur and the two kings takes ship at Rochelle to return to Carmelide (419).

Merlin leaves them and goes through the forests to Rome, where Julius Cæsar is Emperor (420). The Emperor has a strange dream which he keeps to himself, but he sits at meat pensive among his barons. Suddenly Merlin in the form of a great hart dashes into the palace, and falling on his knees before the Emperor says that a savage man will explain the dream (423). In a moment he has vanished. The Emperor in wrath promises his daughter to anyone who will bring the hart or the savage man. Now, the Emperor has a steward named Grisandol, who, though a maiden, has come to the court in the disguise of a squire. To her the hart appears in the forest, and shortly afterwards the savage man (424). He allows himself to be taken in his sleep (425) and brought before the Emperor (427), to whom he explains the dream (430), showing that the vision means that the Empress has twelve youths disguised as maidens, with whom she disports at pleasure, and advising the Emperor to marry Grisandol (433), who is a maiden in disguise. The Emperor follows the advice of the savage man, who, of course, is Merlin, and lives happily with his new wife, after burning the old one (437).

CHAPTER XXIV.

BATTLE BETWEEN THE TWELVE KINGS AND THE SAXONS BEFORE THE CITY OF CLARENCE.

MERLIN now goes to Blase and relates all that has happened. By this time the twelve princes and the duke are assembled to go out against the Saxons (438). A great battle is fought before the city, but the Saxons are too strong for the Christians, and chase them from the field (446). Then the Saxons burn and destroy whatever they find, and so terrify the kings that they dare not venture again to fight the invaders (447).

CHAPTER XXV.

ARTHUR'S MEETING WITH LEODEGAN; MARRIAGE OF ARTHUR AND GONNORE.

ARTHUR and his company arrive in Great Britain (447), and ride to Carmelide, where Leodegan and Gonnore are awaiting them. The marriage is arranged to take place at the end of a week (449). Meanwhile the rebel kings learn of the knighting of the sons of Loth, Urien, and the others, of the arrival of Loth's wife at Logres, and of Arthur's victories. Then they are sorry for their rebellion, but King Loth plots to steal away Arthur's wife, and to put in her place Gonnore, the step-daughter of Cleodalis,<sup>1</sup> with whose wife Leodegan had long lived in adultery (451). Merlin learns of the plot and prepares to frustrate it (452). When the day of the wedding arrives, all march in solemn procession to the minster and witness the ceremony (453). After meat the knights ride forth to a tournament before the city. None can stand against Gawein, who ceases only when Merlin tells him he has done enough (461). When the tournament is over Arthur creates Gawein a knight of the Round Table (462). After the feast that night the conspirators who come with the false Gonnore, seize Queen Gonnore as she goes out into the garden (463). But Bretel and Ulfín, who are there by Merlin's advice, rescue her from their hands (464) and deliver her to Leodegan (465). Then Arthur goes to his wife, "and there they lead merry life together as they that well love" (466). On the following day Leodegan banishes the false Gonnore. Her stepfather Cleodalis takes her away, and leaves her in an abbey that stands in a wild place, where she remains till Bertelak finds her (468).

CHAPTER XXVI.

BANISHMENT OF BERTELAK ; FIGHT AND RECONCILIATION BETWEEN ARTHUR AND LOTH ; ARTHUR'S COURT AT LOGRES ; VOWS OF THE KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE AND THE QUEEN'S KNIGHTS ; THE TOURNAMENT.

ON account of a knight that Bertelak has killed he is banished (470). He rides forth until he comes to the abbey in which Gonnore is staying, and there abides a long time, plotting revenge on Leodegan and Arthur. Eight days after his marriage, Arthur, with his Queen and five hundred men at arms, sets out for Bredigan, having sent Gawein to Logres to make ready the city for the court of August (471). King Loth is lying in wait for Arthur, and attacks him with seven hundred men (473). There is a fierce fight, but in the midst of it Gawein comes up with four-score fellows, and Kay bearing the banner (475). Gawein unhorses his father Loth, makes known who he is, and compels Loth to do homage to Arthur (477). So all ride together to Logres, where Arthur gives rich gifts to his followers (479).

In the middle of August begins Arthur's court, where all the knights and ladies appear in their most splendid robes (480). The knights of the Round Table take a vow to aid any maiden in distress (481). Then Gawein and his fellows, who pray to be the knights of the Queen, vow that one of them shall go to the help of any man or woman who appeals for assistance, and on returning shall relate whatever adventures may befall him (483). When the vows are made, the knights prepare for a grand tournament with five hundred knights on each side (484). As may be expected, they finish with a quarrel. Gawein lays about him with an apple-tree club (493), then draws his sword and kills more than forty. Fighting follows, and the tournament comes to an end. Finally, King Arthur reproves Gawein (500), and brings about a reconciliation. The knights of the Round Table, kneeling, beg forgiveness of Gawein, and agree not to tourney again with the Queen's knights (502).

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE MISSION OF KING LOTH AND HIS FOUR SONS TO MAKE TRUCE WITH THE REBEL KINGS; BATTLES WITH THE SAXONS.

AFTER the tournament is a great feast, where King Arthur and King Ban, and King Bors, and King Loth, sit in state at the high days (504). When the tables are removed the four kings withdraw to a chamber by themselves. Then Loth begins to speak of the Saxons, and says that with the help of the other princes, Arthur could chase the heathen out of the land (505). All agree that Loth is the best messenger to treat with the rebel kings, and he consents to go to them with his four sons (506). At midnight they set out, choosing the unfrequented paths, and so ride for eight days, having a fight on the way with seven thousand Saxons. They kill a goodly number of the heathen, and at nightfall arrive at a forester's house, which is strongly fortified and encircled by deep ditches full of water, and by great oaks and thick bushes (517). They are most hospitably received, and pass the evening in talk till bedtime (519).

While they are asleep, we may speak a moment of King Pelles of Lytenoys (520). This king has a fair son who wishes to be squire to Gawain at the court of King Arthur. The King consents and sends forth his son fully armed and accompanied by a single squire (521). The two meet with the Saxons and defend themselves as best they can, but they are in great straits, and there we will leave them for a time (524).

In the morning King Loth and his sons ride forth, and as they pass by a woodside they see the squire coming down the hill (528). He tells them that his lord is in the hands of the Saxons, and begs their help. They at once attack the Saxons (530) and rescue the King's son (534); but Gaheries and Agravain quarrel, and Gawain has to interfere (537). Then the company ride on towards Roestok, not finding shelter till after midnight, when they arrive at a hermitage (539). Suddenly Gawain and the King's son, whose name is Elizer, hear the cries of a lady in distress. They sally forth and rescue her and a knight (541). The lady is sister to the lady of Roestok, and the knight is her cousin (543). They now join King Loth, and all go together to the Castle of Roestok, where the lord receives them with joy (545) and agrees to deliver Loth's message to the King de Cent Chevaliers, bidding him come in September to Arestuell, in Scotland (546). As they ride forth in the morning they find Duke Escam beset by ten thousand Saxons near Cambenyk (547), and at once put themselves at his service (548). In the great battle which follows the Saxons are routed (553). Then Duke Escam and his guests ride to Cambenyk (555). When he learns of Loth's mission to the princes he agrees to accompany Loth to Arestuell. Loth asks the Duke to send messengers to the other princes that they also may come to Arestuell (557). Loth and his company await for several days the other princes at Arestuell (558). They arrive one after another, and hold a great council. Gawein asks them to consent to a truce, so as to fight the Saxons together. The princes turn to Loth and learn with surprise that he has already done homage to Arthur (559). They, however, agree finally to the truce, which they say they will keep only till they have driven out the Saxons. Then they depart, gather their people, and go to the plain of Salisbury (560).

CHAPTER XXVIII.

ADVENTURES OF SEIGRAMORE, GALASHYN, AND DODINELL; MERLIN'S VISITS TO BLASE AND TO THE PRINCES; ARTHUR'S PREPARATIONS FOR THE WAR.

ARTHUR and his knights are glad when they learn the result of Loth's mission. On the morning of the day after the news comes, three knights of Arthur's court, Seigramore, Galashyn, and Dodinell, rise early and go into the forest in search of adventures (561). Three knights of the Round Table, Agravandain, Mynoras, and Monevall, disguise themselves and leave the court in the hope of meeting the first three knights and trying their mettle. When they arrive at a point where three roads separate, each chooses his way and rides off alone.

story of the false Gonnore, of Gawein's exploits and the submission of King Loth to Arthur, of the great tournament, and of the truce to which the princes have agreed at Arestuell (562). Blase writes all this in his book; and then Merlin begins to prophesy darkly (563). After taking leave of Blase he goes into Little Britain, tells Leonces and Pharien to go with much people to the plain of Salisbury (564), then visits Nimiane (565) and various princes whom he bids also go to Salisbury, and finally arrives at Logres (566). All are rejoiced to see him, and listen eagerly to his account of the allies who are gathering at Salisbury. Then Merlin asks: "When I came thus suddenly upon you right now what did ye behold so intently down the meadows?" Says the King: "We looked on three knights that we saw enter into the forest." Merlin replies: "Wit it verily, that it be three knights of the Round Table in great need of succour" (567). At this the King sends without delay Sir Ewein, Gifflet, and Kay to their rescue (568). The knights have meanwhile met and fought with one another (569). Sir Ewein, Gifflet, and Kay arrive just as the knights are in the thick of the fight, and put an end to it (571). Then all ride together to court. In the talk which follows, Ban says that Sir Gawein is the best knight, and all agree that it is true (573).

After meat the King sends forth the messengers, summoning his people to Salisbury (574), and on the morrow the King and his men ride forth, with Kay bearing the great banner. Spies of the Saxons watch the host as it assembles at Salisbury, and guard against a surprise (575).

CHAPTER XXIX.

PARLIAMENT OF THE PRINCES AT SALISBURY; THEIR HOMAGE TO ARTHUR; AND DEFEAT OF THE SAXONS.

WHEN the princes have all arrived at Salisbury, Merlin tells Arthur that so many good knights shall not be assembled again till the father slay the son and the son the father. After another dark prophecy which Arthur does not understand Merlin sends the King to the barons (579). They tell him as he thanks them for their assistance that they are not his men, but that they are come to defend holy church. "God requite you," says Arthur, "in whose honour and reverence ye do it." "Amen," say the lords, "and be it so as ye will" (580).

When the twelve princes come to Loth's tent, they hold a stormy council, and all declare that they will not make peace with Arthur; but when the King enters with Ban and Bors and the strange princes, the twelve do him reverence, for he is a king anointed (581). After Arthur has addressed them, Loth says that they must follow the counsel of Merlin, and to this they agree (582). When the assembly is dismissed Elizer comes to Gawein, and kneeling before him prays to be made a knight. Gawein grants his request (583), and Arthur bestows upon him the richest arms in his coffers. On the morrow Elizer sits at the King's table between Ban and Bors, and in the jousting which follows wins much praise (584).

Next day the host rides forth from the plain of Salisbury, Merlin leading the way to the city of Clarence (585). Before the city of Garlot they meet with the Saxons, defeat them here (597) and at Clarence, and drive them into the sea (602).

CHAPTER XXX.

DEPARTURE OF BAN AND BORS, AND THEIR VISIT TO AGRAVADAIN.

JOYFUL over the victory, Arthur and his host with Ban and Bors and Loth and Gawein return to Camelot (603). Then by Merlin's advice Ban and Bors, accompanied by the magician, set out for their own country. As they ride toward the sea, they arrive before a great castle closed round with seven walls and defended by five high towers (604). They cross the surrounding marsh by the causeway, and sound an ivory horn which is hung by a silver chain to the branch of a pine-tree (605). Three times Ban blows the horn without result. Again he blows three times. Then in wrath Agravadain, the lord of the castle, demands what they want and who they are. On learning that their lord is King Arthur, he makes them welcome (606). In the castle are three maidens of great beauty, the fairest of whom is the daughter of Agravadain. Merlin by enchantment causes her and Ban to fall in love (607), and transforms himself into a young knight, who comes kneeling before King Ban (608). After supper they go to bed, and by the enchantment of Merlin, all sleep soundly except Ban and the maiden. Then Merlin comes and conducts her to King Ban (609), with whom she stays till day dawns. Merlin leads the maiden again to her bed, and breaks the enchantment (610). All arise, and the two kings prepare to depart, King Ban taking a tender leave of the maiden, and telling her that the son she has conceived will bring her joy and honour (611). With that they continue their journey till they come to Benoyk. Then Merlin leaves them and visits Nimiane his love and Blase his master, to whom he recounts all that has happened (612).

CHAPTER XXXI.

ARTHUR'S GREAT FEAST AT CAMELOT ; THE BATTLE BEFORE TORAISE ; AND THE DEFEAT OF KING RION.

AFTER the departure of the two kings, Arthur remains at Camelot, and there gives a magnificent feast (613). On the second day, when Arthur and Gonnore and the twelve kings with their queens are seated at the high daïs, there enters a blind harper, clad in samite and girt with a baldric of silk, garnished with gold and precious stones. On a silver harp, with golden strings, he harps a lay of Britain so sweetly that Kay, the steward, pauses to listen (615).

Suddenly a strange knight enters, and asks Kay which is the King Arthur. Then he delivers to the King a letter with which he has been entrusted by Rion (619). Arthur gives it to the Archbishop, who breaks the ten seals and reads. Rion, the lord of all the west, announces that he has conquered nine kings, and furred with their beards a mantle of red samite. Nothing is lacking but the tassels, and to furnish these Arthur is commanded to send his beard with all the skin (620). King Arthur is wroth, and dismisses the messenger with the declaration that King Rion shall never have his beard. The knight departs ; and then the harper harps merrily, and finally asks to bear the chief banner in the first battle (621). Arthur refuses because the minstrel is blind. Ban alone suspects that the harper is Merlin, and asks the King to grant the request. As they talk together, the harper disappears, but a moment later re-enters the hall in the form of a little naked child, and again asks the King to deliver to him the banner (622). Arthur laughs, and consents. The child goes out of the palace, and reappears in the form of Merlin. Then the enchanter passes over the sea to Pharien and Leonce, and returning, visits Urien and Loth, summoning them all to the help of King Arthur (623). In a few days the two hosts stand facing each other (624), Merlin bearing the banner that cast out fire and flame (625). All perform prodigies of valour. Finally, Arthur and Rion meet in single combat (628). Arthur cuts off the giant's head (630), and so wins the victory. King Rion's barons submit to Arthur, and return with the body of the dead king into their own land. King Arthur and his host go to Toraise till he is healed of his wounds. Then they ride to Camelot, where the queens are awaiting them, and after four days separate, each man going to his own country, and King Arthur to Logres. Merlin also takes leave of the King, uttering as he goes a mysterious prophecy (631).

CHAPTER XXXII.

MERLIN'S INTERPRETATION OF THE DREAM OF FLUALIS, AND HIS VISIT TO NIMIANE; THE KNIGHTING OF THE DWARF; THE EMBASSY FROM THE EMPEROR OF ROME; ARTHUR'S FIGHT WITH THE GIANT; THE BATTLE WITH THE ROMANS.

MERLIN passes with marvellous speed over land and sea, and comes to Flualis, King of Jerusalem, who has had a wonderful dream (632). Merlin, as usual, has no difficulty in explaining (633) what has puzzled all the wise men, and, without taking the King's daughter as his reward, he goes to Nimiane, who enchants him at her will (634). Merlin teaches her still more, and then departs and goes to Arthur at Logres, visiting Blase on the way in order to make his customary report (635). To this practice of his we owe this veracious chronicle. While King Arthur is sitting at the high days in the hall, there alights from a mule a lovely maiden with an ugly dwarf, whom she helps down from her saddle and brings before the King. With a courteous salute she asks him to grant her a request (635). As he promises, she asks Arthur to knight her companion. Everyone laughs (636), but Arthur keeps his word, attires the dwarf in splendid armour, and makes him knight (637). As the damsel and the dwarf leave the palace, Merlin tells the King that the dwarf is a prince, and it shall soon be known who the maiden is (638).

While they are yet speaking, twelve princes arrive, with a letter from Luce, the Emperor of Rome (639), summoning Arthur before him for having withheld the service and tribute which he should pay, and for having dared to rise against Rome; threatening him in case of refusal with the loss of all Britain and the lands that do him homage, and with imprisonment. There is uproar in the palace when the letter is read; and Arthur withdraws with his princes and barons to prepare a reply (640). In his address Arthur says: "They claim Britain for theirs, and I claim Rome for mine" (642). His princes and barons agree that they must declare war upon Rome. Arthur gives his reply to the twelve messengers, and dismisses them with rich gifts (643).

When they have gone, Merlin tells Arthur to gather his people quickly, and then departs to warn the other princes. They come at once with thousands of knights (643), take ship and join Ban and Bors at Gannes (644).

In the night Arthur dreams of a bear and a dragon who fight together on a mountain, and the dragon slays the bear. Merlin explains to the King when he awakes that the bear is a giant, whom the King shall slay. As they begin their march they hear of the giant who has seized a maiden, and taken her to Mount St. Michel. Arthur at once bids Kay and Bediver make ready to set out about midnight (645). As they come to the mountain they see two great fires shining brightly. On approaching one of the fires, Bediver sees an old woman weeping beside a tomb (646). To his questions she replies: "The niece of Hoell of Nautes lies in this tomb, a victim to the lust of the giant, who now defiles me her nurse." As Bediver tells this to Arthur, the King goes softly against the giant with sword drawn, but the monster sees him coming, and meets him with a great club (648). They have a stubborn fight, but Arthur finally kills him, and Bediver cuts off his head (649). They then return to the host, Bediver bearing the head at his saddle. The barons bless themselves when they see the head, and praise God for the King's victory. After crossing the river Aube their forces are increased by six thousand knights led by Ban and Bors. Then the King fortifies a castle to which he may retreat if need be (650), and sends Gawein, Seigramore, and Ewein with a message to the Emperor bidding him return home. Gawein delivers it defiantly (651), and smites off the head of a knight who says, "Britons can well menace, but at their deeds they are but easy." Then they leap to horse, striking down all who oppose them (652), and finally join a party of six thousand men whom Arthur has sent to their rescue (653). A battle follows in which the Romans are routed, and many of them taken prisoners (654). The Emperor is wroth at his defeat (656), and makes his people leap to horse, and comes to Logres with all his host. Arthur sends his army to the valley of Toraise, between Oston and Logres (658). In the battle which follows the Romans are chased from the field, and the Emperor Luce is slain. Arthur sends the body to Rome with the message that this is the tribute which Britain pays and is ready to pay again if more is required (664). Merlin then tells the King of a great cat full of the devil, which lives by the Lake of Losane (665).

CHAPTER XXXIII.

ARTHUR'S FIGHT WITH THE GREAT CAT; THE SEARCH FOR MERLIN, AND HIS IMPRISONMENT; THE TRANSFORMATION OF GAWAIN INTO A DWARF, AND RETURN TO HIS PROPER FORM; THE BIRTH OF LANCELOT.

SAYS Merlin: "It befell four years ago that a fisher came to the Lake of Losane with his nets, and promised to give our Lord the first fish he should take. Twice he broke his vow, and the third time he drew out a little kitten as black as a coal. This he took home with him to kill the rats and mice, and kept it till it strangled him and his wife and his children, and after that fled to the mountains beyond the lake. And now it slays whomsoever it meets" (665).

Arthur at once makes ready to kill the beast, and rides off with five companions. They go up the mountain, and the King approaches the cave where the cat is. Merlin whistles; the cat rushes out and attacks the King (666). The fight is terrible (667), but the King gains the victory, and carries off the cat's feet in triumph.

The story now turns to speak of Arthur's knights who are taking to France the Roman prisoners with whom they are charged. Claudas, the old enemy of Ban and Bors, attacks the knights as they pass a castle of his (669), but Leonces and Pharien come to the rescue with seven hundred knights. The Britons win the day, and conduct their prisoners to Benoyk as Arthur has commanded (670).

The story returns to the castle of Agravadain where Ban and Bors and Merlin were so hospitably entertained.<sup>1</sup> Fifteen days after their visit, a rich knight named Leriador comes to the lord of the castle and asks for his daughter in marriage. She tells her father that she is too young (671), and finally confesses that she is with child by King Ban. Returning to the knight, her father asks him to wait two years, and then he shall have his will. At this the knight departs in wrath, without replying a word. Shortly after he returns with eight hundred knights and squires and yeomen, and lays siege to the castle (672). Agravadain vanquishes one after another the knights who come to joust with him (673), and finally Leriador himself, who acknowledges himself conquered and goes home into his own country again (674). In due time the maiden is delivered of a son, who afterwards wins great renown (675).

Meanwhile the direful dream which Merlin has expounded to Flualis<sup>2</sup> goes into effect. The King is terrified, renounces his paganism, and turns Christian, with his family (675). His four daughters marry four princes, and are blessed with fifty-four children, some of whom become knights of Arthur (676).

The story now returns to Arthur, who has routed the Romans and killed the great cat. After eight days of delay by the River Aube the King return with his army to Benoyk, and sends Gawein to destroy the castle of the March. This done, Gawein returns to Benoyk (677). King Arthur then receives a message that Leodegan is dead, and on the morrow takes leave of Ban and Bors, never to see them again. On coming to Logres he comforts Queen Gonnore, and abides there long time with his knights and with Merlin (678). One day Merlin takes leave of the King and the Queen, sore weeping that he shall never see them again, and goes to Blase, to whom he recounts all that has happened. Of the dwarf that Arthur has knighted, Merlin says that he is a great gentleman and no dwarf by nature. After eight days Merlin takes leave of Blase and says: "This is the last time that I shall speak with you, for from henceforth I shall sojourn with my love, and never shall I have power to leave her, neither to come nor to go" (679).

Then he goes to Nimiane his love in the forest of Broceliande, and teaches her all his craft (680). She makes an enchantment of nine circles repeated nine times while Merlin is sleeping in her lap. And it seems to Merlin that he is in a strong fortress from which he can never come out. But Nimiane goes and comes as she likes, and has Merlin ever with her (681). After Merlin has been gone seven weeks, Arthur sends Gawain in search of him. The knight sets out with thirty others in a company. At a cross beside a forest they divide into three parties, and continue the search (682). Meanwhile the maiden and her dwarf, whom Arthur has dubbed, come to a forest. This they pass through, and, as they emerge, the damsel sees a knight coming armed upon a steed. The knight claims her for his love, but the dwarf defends her, unhorses the knight (683), and makes him promise to go to Arthur and recount his defeat (684).

And now the tale turns to Seigramoe and his nine knights who are searching for Merlin, but without success (687); then to Ewein and his knights, who also vainly seek Merlin (688) but meet the maiden and go to the assistance of the dwarf, who has overcome four knights and sent them to Arthur; last of all the story speaks of Gawain, who has separated from his knights and is continuing the search alone (689). As he is riding silently along, he meets a damsel splendidly mounted, and passes her without a salute. She stops her palfrey and tells him that he is a vile knight so to pass her without uttering a word. He begs her forgiveness, but she tells him to remember another time to salute a lady or a damsel. For his punishment he shall be like the first man he meets (690). A little later, Gawein meets the damsel and the dwarf, and salutes her courteously. After going a short distance the dwarf changes to his original form, and becomes a young knight of great beauty, while Gawein becomes a dwarf (691). In this guise, however, he continues the quest for Merlin, going all through the realm of Logres and at length to Little Britain. As he is riding through the forest at Broceliande, he hears Merlin speaking, but cannot see him (692). Merlin says that he can never come forth from the place where he is, but that she who has enchanted him can come and go as she likes (693). Merlin comforts Gawein by telling him that he shall soon regain his form, and so he departs glad and sorrowful. As he rides on his way he again meets the damsel whom he had passed without saluting (694). She pretends to be struggling with two knights and cries to Gawein for help. He smites the knights (695) till the damsel cries, "Enough, Sir Gawein, do no more." Then on his promise never to fail to salute a lady she restores him to his original form. He kneels and says that he is her knight for evermore. After taking leave of her he rides to Cardoell, arriving at the time appointed, on the same day as Ewein and Seigramore. Then he tells all his adventures and the fate of Merlin (697).

Whilst they are rejoicing over Gawein, the damsel enters leading the knight who was a dwarf. She presents him to King Arthur, who makes him a companion of the Round Table. Then the story says no more of Arthur and his company, and turns to Ban and Bors. After Arthur takes leave of the two brothers they dwell with joy in Benoyk. To Ban is born a son who is surnamed Lancelot, and to Bors a son named Lyonel, and another called Bohort. All three win great renown by their prowess (698). After the birth of Bohort, Bors falls sick at Gannes, deprived of the help of Ban, who is kept at home by his enemies and finally conquered by the Romans, till he has only the Castle of Trebes left, and this he loses afterwards by the falsity of his seneschal whom he brought up from childhood (699).

IV.

VARIOUS FORMS OF THE MERLIN LEGEND.

THE prose romance of Merlin, as we have it in our fifteenth-century English version, is a translation of a French prose romance which had assumed substantially its final shape early in the thirteenth century. The prose romance is but one of a variety of forms in which much of the material of the romance has been preserved. An enumeration of these forms will show to what extent this branch of the Arthurian legend entered into the literature of the Middle Ages and of later times. The arrangement according to language is not the best in all respects, for it groups together pieces produced under widely different conditions, but the practical convenience is considerable. In this account it will be desirable to give a list not only of the pieces that acquaint us with the history of Merlin, but also of such pieces as the prophecies and other works attributed to him. We can thus get at the outset a general view of the wide range of the legend, though we must reserve a number of questions relating to the Celtic, Latin, French, and English forms for more extended discussion in later sections. In such a sketch as this, exhaustive treatment is not attempted.

A.—Celtic.

1.—A few Welsh poems purporting to belong to the sixth century contain an obscure account of a bard of the name of Myrddin. This name is the exact phonetic equivalent of the Merlin of the romances. Upon the direct development of the romance these poems, as we shall see, had no influence; but possibly some traits of character in the Merlin of the romances are due to legends relating to Myrddin. The Breton ballads relating to Marzin have a very doubtful claim to antiquity. Some critics do not hesitate to pronounce them modern forgeries.<sup>1</sup>

2.—Of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britannie there exist Welsh translations, once supposed to be originals.

3.—The Irish translation of Nennius' Historia Britonum, though made in the eleventh century, was entirely without influence on the development of the legend.

B.—Latin.

The Latin forms are for our purpose more important than the Celtic, even though the legend is essentially Celtic in many of its elements.

1.—Nennius, Historia Britonum (ninth century).

2.—Geoffrey of Monmouth, Historia Regum Britannie (1135–1147). This repeats with considerable additions the story told by Nennius, and adds a large number of prophecies.

3.—Gesta Regum Britannie.<sup>2</sup> This anonymous chronicle,<sup>3</sup> in more than 4500 Latin hexameters, follows closely Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia, and only now and then reveals any individuality. The portion devoted to Merlin is included in verses 2052–3005.

4.—Vita Merlini (about 1148),<sup>4</sup> usually attributed to Geoffrey of Monmouth.

5.—Prophecy of Merlin Silvester (in ten lines), known as the Prophecy of the Eagle to Edward the Confessor. This and other<sup>5</sup> short prophecies attributed to Merlin Silvester, as well as the prophecy of Merlin Ambrose (Book VII. of Geoffrey's Historia), were often copied separately, and are preserved in

6.—Prophecy about Scotland, in thirty leonines.<sup>2</sup> (Ward, Catal. of Romances, i. p. 299.)

7.—San-Marte (Sagen von Merlin, pp. 265–267) printed a Latin prophecy in sixty lines of halting dactylic hexameters (published also by Muratorius, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, t. viii. pp. 1177–1178) attributed to Merlin, and belonging to the time of the Emperor Frederick II. This was one of a number of political prophecies directed against the Popes.<sup>3</sup>

9.—A Latin version of the larger prose romance of Merlin was printed<sup>5</sup> in Venice in 1554.

10.—Besides the pieces above mentioned, the following are attributed by Bale and somewhat later by Fabricius to Merlin Ambrose<sup>6</sup>: 1. Super arce Vortigerni; 2. Epitaphium sexti Regis; 3. Contra Vortigerni Magos; 4. Super quodam Cometa.

C.—French.

1.—The first appearance in French literature of the Merlin legend is in translations of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia.<sup>2</sup> Of these the earliest version was that of Geoffrey Gaimar, which has entirely disappeared. Most popular was the version by Wace, whose Brut appeared in 1155. Several other versions, some of which are preserved in fragmentary form, attest the popularity of the lively Historia of Geoffrey of Monmouth. The so-called Münchener Brut is an anonymous fragment of which only the beginning is preserved.<sup>3</sup> Another anonymous version is the Chanson de Brut, preserved in a thirteenth-century manuscript. This is in five fragments, and is "written as a chanson de geste, in monorhymed tirades of alexandrines. There are 3360 lines remaining."<sup>4</sup> In a fourteenth-century manuscript is a poem of 258 lines translated from Geoffrey. It begins with the story of Vortiger, and breaks off at the point where Merlin is preparing to explain the meaning of the fight of the dragons.<sup>5</sup> Still another version is found in the first part of the Anglo-French Chronicle of Pierre de Langtoft, which, however, had little or no influence on the development of the legend. Pierre slightly condenses Geoffrey's Historia and adds some minor particulars.<sup>6</sup>

2.—Robert de Borron's poem of Merlin belongs to the end of the twelfth century. Of this has been preserved only a fragment of 504 lines. The Merlin was intended as a continuation of the poem of Joseph d'Arimathie.

3.—At the end of the twelfth or the beginning of the thirteenth century, Robert de Borron's poem of Merlin was reduced to prose. This is the first branch of the romance of Merlin, and is the source of chapters i.-vi. in the English version.

4.—Several thirteenth and fourteenth century continuations of the short prose Merlin exist, but they have never been fully described.<sup>1</sup> Paulin Paris called the ordinary continuation the Book of Arthur.

5.—Prophéties de Merlin.<sup>2</sup> Translated from the Latin by "Mestre Richart d'Yrlande," at the command of the Emperor Frederick II. "These prophecies are quite unconnected with those in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia; and such as are not purely romantic relate more to the affairs of Italy and of the Holy Land than to those of France or Germany, and hardly at all to those of England."<sup>3</sup>

6.—We have in a manuscript of the thirteenth or fourteenth century an Anglo-French "prophecy of Merlin about the six kings that are to follow King John, who are here called the Lamb of Winchester, the Dragon of Mercy, the Goat of Carnarvon, the Boar of Windsor, the Ass with Leaden Feet, and the Accursed Mole."<sup>4</sup>

7.—In 1455 Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia was translated into French prose by Jehan Wauquelin of Mons.<sup>5</sup>

8. — The first printed edition of the large prose Merlin appeared in 1498, and was followed by numerous others.<sup>1</sup>

1498. The Romance and the Prophecies, printed for Anthoine Verart, Paris, The copy in the Bibliothèque Nationale is a small folio in black letter, containing three volumes bound in one, the first two containing the Romance, and the third the Prophecies. These last are, however, as Ward remarks, printed “in a strange state of disorder.” This is the rarest and choicest of the printed editions, and it has on the title-page a large illustration of the General Resurrection, and at irregular intervals woodcuts of a battle (seventeen times repeated), and of Christ asleep in the ship (on last page). The colophon at the end of vol. iii. gives the date: “Cy finissent les prophecies Merlin nouuellement imprime a paris lan mil. iiii. cccc. iiii. xx. xviii. pour Anthoine Verart demourant devāt nostre Dame De Paris a lymage saint Jehan leuangeliste/ ou au palays au premier pillier deuant la chappelle ou lenchâte la messe de messeigneurs de parlement.” The same publisher brought out another edition the same year. The forms of the letters prove that the second edition was reprinted from the type used in the first edition, but reset.

1505 (2nd September). The Romance and the Prophecies were printed for Michel le Noir at Paris, in three small quarto volumes, black letter.

1507. The same publisher brought out the same work in two quarto volumes, black letter.<sup>a</sup>

1526 (June). The Prophecies were printed at Paris for Philippe le Noir in a small quarto of two columns, black letter.

1526. In this same year the Romance and the Prophecies appeared in three octavo volumes, black letter.

A quarto edition in black letter of the Prophecies, without date, but assigned to the year 1526, was printed at Rouen for Jehan Mace of Rouen, Michel Angier of Caen, and Richard Mace of Rouen. Brunet mentions a quarto edition in black letter of the second volume of Merlin by the same publishers, who doubtless also printed the first volume, and assigns the two to 1526. Another quarto edition in black letter, also without date, appeared in three volumes, “Nouvellement imprimes a Paris, pour le veufe feu Jehan Trepperel et Jehan Jeannot.”

1528 (24th December). The Romance and the Prophecies were again printed for Philippe le Noir in three small quartos, black letter, two columns.<sup>b</sup>

1535. Another edition of Merlin was printed by Jehan Mace from a fifteenth-century manuscript. This was the last of the old editions.

1797. In this year appeared in Paris, in three volumes, 16mo., Le Roman de Merlin l'enchanteur, remis en bon français, et dans un meilleur ordre, par S. Boulard. Villemarqué gave a short analysis of the romance in his Myrdhinn ou l'enchanteur Merlin,<sup>c</sup> and Paulin Paris a much longer and better one in the second volume of the Romans de la Table Ronde.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Sommer (Morte Darthur, iii. 7, note) remarks that an edition appeared at Paris in 1510 (?) and another at Rouen in 1520 (?). As his dates are conjectural, I do not know whether he has in mind the editions I have cited under the year 1526.

“En mi la cort sor .i. tapit
Ot .xxx. muis d'esterlins blans,
Car lors avoient à cel tens
Corréu dès le tens Merlin
Par toute Bretaine esterlin.”

Merlin is also mentioned in Gautier's continuation of Chrestien's Conte du Graal,<sup>3</sup> as well as in the prose Queste du Saint-Graal.

Guillaume le Clerc, a thirteenth-century trouvère, in Li Romans des Aventures Fergus refers to “Noquestan

U Merlin's sejourna maint an.”<sup>4</sup>

In Claris et Laris Merlin is mentioned by name (l. 22,931), and elsewhere referred to as he, “Qui tout set, tout fet, et tout oit”; and he is called the “sages Mellins” in the Roman de l'Esconfle.<sup>5</sup> Merlin's exploit of bringing over the great stones to Salisbury Plain is touched upon in the Roman du Hen. The author of the Conte du Perroquet makes some use of the story of Merlin and alludes to the Prophecies, though he makes but slight reference to other Arthurian literature.<sup>6</sup> The enchanter plays a large part in Les grandes et inestimables Croniques du Strangely enough there does not exist a single modern edition of this famous work. The first part, which extends to the coronation of Arthur, is included in the edition of the Huth MS. published (1886) for the Société des Anciens Textes Français; but the manuscript is a poor one, and the first part contains only about one-seventh of the entire romance. A proposal to print in fac-simile a 14th century vellum MS. (Brit. Mus. Add. 10,292) of the ordinary Merlin was made by Dr. H. Oskar Sommer in the Academy (1891), and in vol. iii. of his Studies on the Sources of Malory's Morte Darthur (London, 1891), but nothing has appeared as yet.

Since the close of the mediæval period Merlin has suffered neglect in France. Except for Jacques Vergier's (1657-1720) versified tale of l'Anneau de Merlin<sup>2</sup> and Edgar Quinet's strange prose poem of Merlin l'Enchanteur<sup>3</sup> (1860), there is little or nothing in modern French literature to remind us of the place that the great enchanter held in the literature and the thought of the Middle Ages. The group of Merlin legends recently put together by Méras is a mere collection of exercises for teaching boys French syntax!<sup>4</sup>

D.—Provençal.

From allusions to Merlin in the Cabra juglar of Giraud de Cabrareira, as well as in the Guordo of Bertrand de Pâris de Roerge, Francisque Michel inferred the existence of the romance of Merlin in Provençal.<sup>5</sup> This opinion was justified by the publication in 1883 of the fragments of a Provençal translation of the romance of Merlin.<sup>6</sup> But, as Chabaneau remarks (p. 4): "Allusions to Merlin are very rare in Provençal poetry.

F. 1 contains the amour of Uter with Ygerne, from near the beginning of the incident to the point where Uter prepares to besiege the Duke of Tintagel; f. 2 tells the story from the death of Uter to the episode of the sword enclosed in the anvil. Cf. Chabaneau, pp. 3, 4. The fragments differ slightly from the version of B. N., MS. fr. 747.

E.—Italian.

The earliest Italian translation of the French romance of Merlin is the Historia di Merlino, made in 1379, and printed in a folio edition at Venice in 1480.<sup>1</sup> The Life and Prophecies were printed in a quarto volume at Florence in 1495. Two other quarto editions appeared at Venice, one in 1507 and the other in 1529; and two octavo editions, one in 1539 and one in 1554.<sup>2</sup> The popularity of Merlin is further shown by allusions in Dante's Divina Commedia, in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso (c. 3 and c. 26),<sup>3</sup> in Bojardo's Orlando Innamorato (l. 3), and in the works of writers of lesser fame.

F.—Spanish.

The romance of Merlin was early translated into Spanish, and printed at Burgos in 1498, under the title: El baladro del sabio Merlin cō sus profecias. Only the first nineteen chapters, which tell the story up to the coronation of Arthur, have the same subject-matter as the Merlin of Robert de Borron. After that point this version agrees in many particulars with the continuation found in the Huth MS.,<sup>4</sup> but affords among other rarities a translation of at least a part of the lost Conte du brait. In 1500 appeared a folio edition of Merlin y demanda del Santo Grial, printed at Seville. Merlin's celebrity in the Iberian peninsula is attested by allusions scattered through the older Spanish literature, some of which are found in the Historia de la Reyna Sebilla,<sup>1</sup> in Don Quixote, and the famous romance of Don Belianus.

G.—Portuguese.

The Portuguese Merlin contains, according to M. Gaston Paris, "the third part of the compilation of which the Huth MS. has preserved to us the first two."<sup>2</sup>

H.—Netherland.

In the year 1261, the poet Jacob van Maerlant translated the Graal and the prose Merlin under the title: Historie van den Grale and Merlijns Boeck (circâ 10,400 ll.). He added among other things a trial of Satan. His work was continued by Lodewijc van Velthem (1326) in his Boec van Coninc Artur, which is a close translation of the Livre du roi Artus (25,800 ll.).<sup>3</sup>

I.—German.

Some of the romances of the Round Table, as, for instance, the Holy Grail, found an early welcome in Germany, but it was not till 1478 that Ulrich Fürterer, a poet of the court of Albrecht IV., duke of Bavaria, wrote a long verse romance "on the knights of the Round Table and the Holy Grail, in which he recounted also the history of Merlin."<sup>4</sup> Nothing else worthy of mention<sup>5</sup> appeared till 1804, when Friedrich von Schlegel translated from an early edition (1528) a considerable part of the French prose romance. Scarcely anything is omitted up to the point (p. 256) where Arthur goes to the assistance of Leodegan.

After this point Schlegel devotes his few remaining pages (which are very small) to the most important incidents in Merlin's later career, his relations with Nynianne (sic), and his tragic end. In 1829 Uhland wrote his short ballad of Merlin der Wilde.<sup>1</sup> Three years later Karl Immermann attempted to unite in his drama of Merlin: a Myth,<sup>2</sup> the leading motives of the Faust legend with those of the Holy Grail, but he failed to awaken popular interest in the great enchanter. This piece closes the Merlin literature in German.<sup>3</sup>

J.—Icelandic.

1.—Merlinus-Spá: or the prophecy of Merlin. This is "an early versified paraphrase [in two parts, of 290 and 459 verses respectively] of Geoffrey of Monmouth's well-known prophecy, the text of which is freely treated and amplified by one who knew some, at least, of the old Heroic Lays."<sup>4</sup> The author was a monk, Gunnlaug Leifsson.

2.—The Breta-Sögur is a translation of Geoffrey's Historia condensed and altered.<sup>5</sup>

K.—English.

I will here outline the history of the legend from its first introduction into English down to the present. The relations of the prose romance to the French original will best be treated in another section; but I shall here venture a somewhat more extended discussion of the English forms of the legend than I have given to those of the other literatures.

1.—The earliest mention of Merlin in an English book is in Layamon's Brut<sup>6</sup> (ll. 12,884–19,961), written about the

year 1205. The Brut is in large measure a translation of Wace's Roman de Brut; but although Laȝamon expanded his work to more than double the size of the original, he added scarcely anything<sup>1</sup> to the story of Merlin.

2.—Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle appeared at the end of the thirteenth century, about a century after Laȝamon's Brut, but Robert's book, in so far as it touches the history of Merlin (ll. 2271–3480), is a translation of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia.<sup>2</sup>

3.—Robert of Brunne's Chronicle (1338) follows Wace in the legendary portion<sup>3</sup> of the story; but Robert's variations from his French original are trifling.

4.—The chronicles above mentioned are dull enough, and can lay but slight claim to be called literature. The earliest really literary use of Merlin in English is in the long verse romance entitled Arthour and Merlin, which was translated from a French original as early as the first quarter of the fourteenth century, and possibly even earlier.<sup>4</sup> This is among the most important of the romances of Merlin, as well for its intrinsic merit as for its relations to the great prose romance. Judged by a reasonably severe standard, many passages are tiresome enough. The author is still too dependent upon his source;

<sup>3</sup> ll. 6989–9768 relate to Merlin. The portion of the Chronicle based on Wace was edited by Dr. F. J. Furnivall, for the Rolls Series, under the title, Robert of Brunne's Story of England, Lond., 1887, 2 vols., 8vo. Cf. A. W. Zatsche, Ueber den ersten Theil der Bearbeitung des Roman de Brut des Wace durch Robert Mannyng of Brunne, Reudnitz-Leipzig, 1887.

but in more than one feature the Arthour and Merlin marks a distinct advance over the narrative literature that preceded it. The poem is about as long as the first nine books of Paradise Lost, but is nevertheless a fragment, which breaks off after the victory gained by Leodegan, Cleodalis, Arthur, Ban, and Bohort, over King Rion and the giants.<sup>1</sup> The last lines are:—

“pai maden gret blis and fest,
And after zeden hem to rest.”<sup>2</sup>

The story so closely resembles the prose romance that Ellis's analysis of the poem might almost be taken for an analysis of the prose romance. There are, however, striking differences, some of which I will note. The poem begins by telling of Constans and Vortigern,<sup>3</sup> and the tower which the latter constructed.<sup>4</sup> The poem describes in 628 lines what is related in the prose romance in about six pages. The story of the rich man's daughter who is deceived by the devil<sup>5</sup> is brought in later (l. 799 sqq.). In dramatic effect the poem is in this instance much inferior to the prose romance. As some of the minor differences, we note that in the poem<sup>6</sup> Merlin is five years old when brought before Vortigern; in our romance, seven years old. In the poem the boy Merlin, while being conducted to the king, laughs<sup>7</sup> three times, apparently without cause.

The occasion of the third outburst is, however, that the king's chamberlain is a woman in the disguise of a man, with whom the queen has fallen in love.<sup>1</sup> In the prose version Merlin laughs but twice. According to the poem,<sup>2</sup> the Magi when brought before the king and confronted by Merlin plead that they have been deceived by the signs in the sky. Merlin says that his father the devil had evidently planned thus to destroy his son. Of this turn of the incident the prose romance (p. 39) knows nothing. Among the important omissions of the poem is that of the bringing over of the great stones from Ireland,<sup>3</sup> as well as all account of Merlin's visits to Nimiane.<sup>4</sup> The Holy Grail is scarcely referred to, though not altogether forgotten.<sup>5</sup>

Among the additions to the poem we should not overlook the charming verses on the seasons, and the pretty little by-play between Arthur and his young bride as he goes forth to battle :

pat ich day paramour,
 Guenore armed king Arthour ;
 At ich armour, þe gest seit þisse,
 Arthour þe maiden gan kisse, Merlin bad Arthour, þe kyng, þenche on þat ich kisseing,
 When he com in to bataile ;

“ Woned wiþ outen Niniamé, þat wiþ hir queint gin
 Bigiled þe gode clerk Merlin.”

With this compare the prose version p. 185.

What has been adduced is sufficient to prove either that the English prose romance is based upon an original differing considerably from the original of the verse romance, or that the English translator of the prose romance purposely varied and expanded his original. The English prose romance is, however, elsewhere shown to be an almost slavish translation of the French prose version. There is enough general agreement to show that the basis of the poem and of the prose romance is in essential features the same, and enough difference to prove that the two versions cannot be based on exactly the same original. I imagine the poem to be based upon one of the numerous French prose continuations of the original prose romance of Merlin. The author refers to his source as the "boke,"<sup>1</sup> and once to the Brout,<sup>2</sup> which must be the Brut, but of course only a small portion of this poem can be referred to Wace. It is barely possible that the original was in French verse, but of this I feel by no means certain.<sup>3</sup>

THE POEM, ll. 3067-3106.			THE PROSE MERLIN, p. 108.
		Number of knights.			Number of knights.
1. Lot . . . . .		500	1. Loth . . . . .		500
2. Nanters of Garlot . . . . .		700	2. Vrien of Gorre . . . . .		400

6. Angvisant . . . . .		500	6. Ydiers . . . . .		400

In the first great tournament the best knights, according to the poem (ll. 3591-3601), are: Lucan the boteler, Kay, Grimfles, Maruc, Gumas, Placides, Driens, Holias, Graciens, Marlians, Flaundrius, Sir Meliard, Drukius, Breoberuis. The prose version (p. 135) mentions the following: Gifflet, Lucas the boteller, Marke de la roche, Guynas le Bleys, Drias de la foreste sauge, Belyas, Blyos de la casse, Madyens le crespes, Flaundryns le blanke, Grassien, Placidas le gays.

5.—A later version of a portion of this romance is contained in four manuscripts, which differ considerably.<sup>1</sup> The romance begins with the story of King Constance and "Fortager," tells of the birth of Merlin and his wonderful deeds till the death and burial of Uter Pendragon. According to Ward:<sup>2</sup>

The rebel kings who fight against Arthur, with the number of the accompanying knights, are:—

Still more remarkable is the agreement in the lists of the princes and knights who came to the help of Leodegan. Poem, ll. 5410-5498: 1. Ban; 2. Bohort; 3. Arthour; 4. Antour; 5. Vlfin; 6. Bretel; 7. <sup>1</sup> The MSS. are:—<sup>a</sup> Lincoln's Inn Library, MS. 150, containing 1980 lines. <sup>b</sup> Bishop Percy's Folio MS., Brit. Mus. Kölbing remarks (Altengl. Bibl. iv. p. xvii.) that Douce MS., No. 124, is a very careless copy of the version of the Auchinleck MS. Kölbing prints L and D with the variants of P and H (Altengl. Bibl. iv. 275-370). P is printed in Bishop Percy's Folio Manuscript, edited by Hales and Furnivall, Lond. 1867, vol. i. pp. 422-496. For the relation of the later version to the other versions see Kölbing, iv. pp. cliii.-clxxii.; Hales and Furnivall, i. pp. 419-421. Other details are given by Kölbing, iv. pp. xvii.-xviii.; Ward, Catal. of Romances, i. 385, 386; and in Arthour and Merlin (edited by Turnbull for the Abbotsford Club, Edin. 1838), pp. x.-xiii.

"The events relating to Merlin are fuller than those given by Geoffrey of Monmouth and Wace, and they agree with those given by Robert de Borron, in the prose romance of Merlin. The present version is probably translated from a French poem."

It is hardly necessary to remark that the birth of Merlin with which Robert de Borron's romance begins, is in this verse romance brought in after a long account of "Fortager" and the sons of Constance, and that minor differences are numerous.

6.—From the middle of the fourteenth century Merlin seems to have been in favour in England. Laurence Minot (1352) begins one of his political songs entitled,

"How Edward at Hogges vnto land wan, And rade thurgh France or euer he blan."

with the words—

"Men may rede in Romance right
Of a grete clerk þat Merlin hight;
Ful many bokes er of him wreten,
Als þir clerkes wele may witten;
And ȝit in many priué nokes
May men find of Merlin bokes.
Merlin said þus with his mowth,
Out of þe north into þe sowth Suld cum a bare ouer þe se, þat suld mak many man to fle," etc.

A few years later (1355–1362) Thomas Grey in his old French Scalachronica mentions Thomas of Erceldoune, and ranks him along with William Banastre and Merlyne.<sup>1</sup> In Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (about 1360) there is a mere allusion to Merlin (l. 2448).

<sup>1</sup> The various points of contact of the legend and the prophecies of Merlin with Thomas of Erceldoune, are pointed out by Alois Brandl in vol. ii. of the Sammlung engl. Denkmäler in kritischen Ausgaben, Berlin, 1880, 8vo. For example, Merlin's love for Nimiane is paralleled by Thomas's love for a nymph.

In the famous Process of the Sevyng Sages the eleventh tale bears the title Herowdes and Merlin.<sup>1</sup> Then in the metrical romance of Sir Gowghter<sup>2</sup> we read near the beginning—

“Sum tyme the fende hadde postee
For to dele with ladies free
In liknesse of here fere,
So that he bigat Merlyng and mo,
And wrought ladies so mikel wo,
That ferly it is to here.”—ll. 7–10.

A little farther on are these very singular lines—

“pis chyld within hur was no nodur,
But eyvon Marlyon halfe brodur,<sup>3</sup>
For won fynd gatte hom bothe.”—ll. 97–99.

On this romance A. Brandl remarks—

“Gegenüber der französischen Quelle, deren Kern durch einen reich verzweigten Stammbaum auf das indische Märchenbuch Sendabad zurückgeht, hat der englische Bearbeiter manches vereinfacht und seinen Landsleuten näher gebracht, namentlich aber den Zauberer Vergil in den nationalen Merlin verwandelt.”<sup>4</sup>

Towards the end of the fourteenth century (1387) the Latin Polychronicon of Ranulf Higden, written early in the reign of Edward III., was translated into English by John of Trevisa. The Polychronicon, as its name implies, is a compilation bringing

But Marlynges half brother:
On) fende gat hem bothe.”

together in mediæval fashion a vast amount of historical material, but it contains nothing new about Merlin.<sup>1</sup>

7.—No important literary use was made of Merlin during the remainder of the fourteenth and till about the middle of the fifteenth century, when some unknown scholar translated (c. 1450–1460) the great prose romance of Merlin from the French prose redaction of Robert de Borron's poem and the ordinary continuation known as the Book of Arthur. This is the romance which is the central point of our investigation.

8.—About the same time (1450 ?) Henry Lonelich, skinner, made a rhyming version of the French prose Merlin from a manuscript closely allied to that from which the prose version is translated. The metrical romance contains, according to Kölbing,<sup>2</sup> about 28,000 lines, and forms a part of MS. 80 of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. The beginning is at f. 88b, col. 1, and is as follows :—

“Now gyneth the Devel to wraththen him sore,
As Aftir scholen ȝe herkene & here wel More, whanne that Oure Lord to helle wente and took Owt Adam with good Entente and Also Eve and Ek Othere Mo, ȝat with him he likede for to han tho.
and whanne ȝe develis behelden this,
Moche drede and Merveille they hadden, I-wis.
So as Aftyrward longe beffelle, to-gederis they Conseilled, the develis, ful snelle and token hem to-Gederis In parlement, the Maister Develis be On Assent, and seiden : “what Mester Man Is he, this,
that doth vs here Al this distres ?

we Mown not Aȝens him Maken defens, whanne he is Owht In Owre presens and bynemeth vs that we scholde haue, and for hym non thing mowen we kepen save.”

I have examined the first 6200 lines of the poem,<sup>1</sup> and find a remarkably close general agreement between it and the prose romance. All the incidents are the same, and the difference in details is very slight. This agreement suggests three questions: First, is Lonelich's Merlin a mere versification of the English prose version? or, secondly, is the prose version based on Lonelich's romance? or, thirdly, are both versions based on exactly the same French original?

We have first to note that the verse romance is considerably more prolix<sup>2</sup> than the prose; but the prolixity is largely due to unskilful padding of the verse. Of course, we do not expect exact verbal agreement between a verse and a prose romance, even though translated from the same French original, and we cannot draw satisfactory conclusions from minor variations in phrases, or even from the omission of sentences. The exigencies of metre lead a halting versifier into many strange paths. But if the two translators had been really one, or if one had borrowed from the other, or if the French manuscript had been the same in both cases, we should have considerable verbal agreement in phrases and sentences, as well as in numerals and proper names.

A considerable number of passages show almost exact verbal agreement, but this seems to be due to the similarity of the source rather than to actual borrowing by one English version from the other, for the diction as a whole is so distinct in the

<sup>2</sup> By a rough calculation I estimate the first 6200 lines to contain not far from 43,000 words; the prose version does not much exceed 35,000 words.

The agreement in the numerals is very close, but there are some trifling variations which indicate that the two translators based their work upon slightly different manuscripts. I give a list of some of the numerals, and add for comparison the same as found in the Huth Merlin. In contrast with the French, the two English versions show striking agreement. See Table I. p. 54.

More striking differences are found in the names; and these seem unmistakably to indicate that the two versions are independent, and based upon slightly different French manuscripts. I pass over most of the differences in spelling; for while the forms in the two versions follow pretty regularly unlike types, there are too many variations in the English prose text itself to make an argument satisfactory that is based on mere orthography.

More important still are such differences as appear in the following passages :—

(1) At l. 49 of Lonelich's version we read : "And hem also anoynteth with oynement." The English prose has no reference to ointment.

(2) At l. 241, l. 256, and l. 1064 of the poem we read that the erring maiden was to be stoned. The prose version (p. 5, p. 16) knows nothing of the stoning.

(3) In the poem (ll. 1286-1292), the judge says—

"ȝif thou konne proven that thou seist pleyn,
Thy modyr from brenneng schalt thou save,
And al thyn owne axeng thou schalt have ;
But, natheles, and it be, as thou dost telle,
Thanne schal I don brenne bothe ful snelle,
Bothe myn owne modyr and ek thyn,
And bryngen hem bothe to a schort fyn."

The prose version (p. 18, ll. 24-27) has—

"Tho gan the Iuge to be right wrath, and seyde : 'Yef thow canste do so, then haste reserwed thy moder fro brennynge ; but wyt thow weH, yef thow canste not prewe this vpon hir, I shaH brenne bothe the and thy moder to-gedere.'"

(4) In Lonelich's version (ll. 1465-1467) we read—

“For sweche spirites as they be Ben icleped Equibedes, I telle the,
And from the eyr into the erthe they gon.”

The Huth Merlin (i. p. 28) has—

“Je sui fieus d'un anemi qui engingna ma mere. Et saces que ceste maniere d'anemis ont a non Ekupedes, et repairent en l'air.”

Yet in the English prose Merlin (p. 20) the proper name is omitted—

“I am the sone of the enmy that begiled my moder with engyn, and their repair is in the air.”

(5) Lonelich writes (ll. 1667-1676)—

“and hos that wil knowen In Certaygne what kynges that weren In grete Bretaygne Sethen that Cristendom thedyr was Browht,
They scholen hem fynde hos so that it sowht,
In the Story of Brwttes book;
there scholen ȝe it fynde and ȝe welen look.
which that Martyn de Bewre traunslated here From latyn Into Romaunce In his Manere. but leve we now of Brwtes book, and after this storrye now lete vs look.
In Bretaygne somtyme A kyng there was That Costantyn was clepid, In that plas.”

The English prose (pp. 23, 24) has—

“And he that wiȝ knowe the lyf of kynges whiche were in the grete Bretayne be-fore that cristendom come, be-holde the story of Bretons. That is a boke that maister Martyn traunslated oute of latyn, but heire rested this matere. And turneth to the story of Loth, a crysten kynge in Bretayne, whos name was Constance.”

This passage is exceedingly important in that Lonelich's version mentions Martyn de Bewre.<sup>1</sup> This translator is mentioned in but two of the French MSS., and these two, while representing very closely the version followed by the translator of the English prose, are not in every detail coincident with it.

The differences between the English prose version and the metrical version by Lonelich compel us to answer in the negative the three questions with which we started, and admit no other conclusion than that the two translators worked independently upon different French manuscripts having almost, but not perfectly, identical readings.<sup>1</sup>

9.—Of all the older Arthurian literature none exceeds in interest to the English reader the Morte Darthur of Sir Thomas Malory (1469). This was first printed by Caxton in 1485, and speedily became one of the most popular books in England. When we compare the Romance of Merlin with the Morte Darthur, we find that for a little distance the two stories run in almost parallel channels, though there is less agreement than one might expect, and this, though scattered throughout the Merlin, is confined almost wholly to the first five books of the Morte Darthur.<sup>2</sup> The points of contact may be briefly pointed out in detail. The story opens in the Morte Darthur with the amour of Uter Pendragon and Igrayne. In nine pages and a half Malory arrives at Arthur's coronation and the feast which he held at Pentecost.<sup>3</sup> Many of the incidents are substantially the same as in the Merlin, but much abridged. Merlin's origin is passed over without remark, and he is introduced in the first chapter as a personage well known: "Wel my lord said Syre Vlfus/ I shall feke Merlyn/ and he shalle do yow remedy that youre herte shalbe pleasyd." Up to the end of B. I. chap. xvi. there is considerable general agreement in the incidents of the two versions, though the Morte Darthur gives a very brief account of what is told in the Merlin with many words and manifold variations. Chapter xvii. has some incidents found in the Merlin, but much altered. From this point up to chap. xxvii. is only here and there an incident that reminds one of the Merlin. In chap. xxvii. (p. 74) is the message of King Ryons, who sends for Arthur's beard. In Merlin this occurs not far from the end (p. 619) of the story. The war with the Romans as related by Malory in the fifth book of the Morte Darthur agrees only in confused outlines with the version in Merlin. According to Malory the war occurs after Merlin is enclosed in the rock. In our version Merlin is at Arthur's side assisting him with wise counsels. In the Morte Darthur, in the same chapter and on the same page (B. IV. ch. i. p. 119) in which the tragic end of Merlin is described,<sup>1</sup> Lancelot is spoken of as a child at the court of King Ban his father. But at the beginning of the war with the Romans the child has become a famous knight, and plays a part like that of Gawain in the Merlin.<sup>2</sup> In the prose Merlin, however, Lancelot is not yet born.<sup>3</sup> In the fight with the giant on Mount St. Michel, Malory (B. V. ch. v.) adds the picturesque detail that there "were thre fayr damoysels tornynge thre broches whereon were broched twelue yonge children late borne like yonge byrdes." Of this our version knows nothing. In minor details and in phraseology the two versions differ continually, even when the agreement is closest, and after a certain point the two narratives are entirely different. The Morte Darthur hurries at once to the later career of Arthur and his knights. The Merlin relates with endless detail the incidents of Arthur's early life, and introduces us to a large number of the characters who figure in the Morte Darthur. This masterpiece of poetic prose, which Sir Walter Scott pronounced the best romance in our language, far exceeds in literary merit the confused and prolix Merlin; but this, as affording in effect an introduction to the Morte Darthur, must always retain a real interest. Even considered by itself, the Merlin has in more than one passage a nameless charm and beauty in comparison with which the Morte Darthur is distinctly inferior, though the heights occasionally reached in the Merlin make us see only more plainly the barren wastes through which much of the narrative creeps.

<sup>2</sup> There are twenty-one books in all. My references are to H. Oskar Sommer's edition, Lond. 1889, Vol. I. Text. For a minute account of the relations of the Morte Darthur to the Merlin see Sommer's third volume, Studies on the Sources, pp. 14-58.

<sup>3</sup> In the Merlin (p. 108) the feast was held after the middle of August. Cf. Morte Darthur, i. pp. 35-44.

of the prophecies in the collection are assigned to Thomas of Erceldoune<sup>1</sup> and others.

11.—At the end of Caxton's Chronicle is a little poem on Merlin printed by Wynkyn de Worde in 1498, of which I cite the more interesting portions. This poem is a translation of a Latin poem in Higden's Polychronicon.

At Neuyn in Northwales

12.—In the sixteenth century interest in Merlin is evidenced by the publication in 1510 by Wynkyn de Worde of A Lytel Tretys of the Byrth and Prophecyes of Merlin. The celebrated printer issued another edition in 1529, and John Hawkyngs a third in 1533.

13.—The numerous chronicles written in the sixteenth century detail with more or less fulness the exploits of the enchanter, but they tell nothing new. We find, however, in the sixteenth-century literature, in so far as it turned for inspiration to the romances or to the legendary history of Britain, that Merlin was one of the convenient "properties" of the poets.<sup>1</sup> We meet him in Warner's Albion's England (1586), which is full of early British legends. In a splendid passage of the Faery Queene<sup>2</sup> Spenser tells of the wall of brass<sup>3</sup> with which Merlin began to surround the city of Caermarthen just before he was lured to his grave in the rock by the wiles of the fair temptress.

14.—In 1603 appeared for the first time in print<sup>4</sup> some old alliterative Scottish prophecies attributed to Merlin, along with prophecies by Thomas the Rhymer and others. In these prophecies we read (i. ll. 114–120)—

"When the Cragges of Tarbat is tumbled in the sey,
At the next sommer after sorrow for euer:
Beides bookes haue I seene, and Banisters also,
Meruelous Merling and all accordes in one:
Meruelous Merling is wasted away,
With a wicked woman, woe might shee be;

<sup>2</sup> B. III. canto 3, stanza 6 sqq. The argument of the third canto is:

"Merlin bewrays to Britomart
The state of Arthegall,
And shows the famous progeny
Which from them springen shall."

Other references to Merlin occur, F. Q. I. canto 9, st. 4, 5, where Merlin is represented as visiting "Old Timon" who had taken Arthur at his birth to bring up. Other references occur B. II. c. 8, st. 20; B. III. c. 2, st. 18, 21.

<sup>4</sup> This collection has been several times reprinted, 1615, 1680, 1833. The last edition bears the title—"Collection of Ancient Scottish Prophecies, in alliterative verse, reprinted from Waldegrave's edition, M.DC.III. Edinburgh; printed by Ballantyne and Co., M.DCCC.XXXIII. 4to." Sir Walter Scott made considerable use of these prophecies. Cf. also section 10, ante, and Ward, Catal. of Romances, i. pp. 334–336.

A little later (ll. 170-172) we find—

“ As Bertlingtones bookes, and Banister us telles, Merling and many more, that with maruels melles,
And also Thomas Rymour in his tales telles.”

In the second of these prophecies (ll. 63-65) we read—

“ Oft this booke haue I seene, and better thereafter,
Of Meruelous Merling, but it is wasted away,
With a wicked woman, woe might it be.”

In 1612, Michael Drayton brought out the first eighteen books of his Polyolbion—a poetical description of England—and related the various legends connected with the places described. Thus he sings of “Stonenge,” of the wall of brass that the magician would fain have built about Caermarthen, of his imprisonment in a cavern, and of the spirits that “a fearful horrid din still in the earth do keep.”<sup>1</sup>

In Song the Fifth (vol. ii. pp. 757, 758), he tells of Merlin's birth, but speaks sceptically of the incubuses.<sup>2</sup> In Song the Tenth (vol. iii. pp. 842, 843) he devotes twenty-four lines to Merlin and his prophecies.<sup>3</sup>

Ben Jonson, though he had scornfully referred in The New Inn (act i. sc. 1) to the Arthurian stories, raises Merlin from his tomb, and lets him take part in the Speeches at Prince Henry's Barriers.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>3</sup> In Drayton's Remarks to the Reader, May 9, 1612; he says: “In all, I believe him most, which, freest from affection and hate (causes of corruption), might best know, and hath with most likely assertion delivered his report. Yet so, that, to explain the author, carrying himself in this part an historical, as in the other a chorographical Poet. I infer oft, out of the British story, what I importune you not to credit. Of that kind are those prophecies out of Merlin sometimes interwoven; I discharge myself; nor impute you to me any serious respect of them.”—Works, ii. p. 649.

All through the seventeenth century Merlin enjoyed a certain popularity, which showed itself in a variety of ways. In 1641 appeared in London his Life, written by Thomas Heywood, the most prolific dramatist of the time, under the following title: "The Life of Merlin, surnamed Ambrosius, his Prophecies and Predictions interpreted; and their Truth made good by our English Annals."<sup>1</sup>

Twenty-one years later William Rowley wrote a tragedy-comedy entitled The Birth of Merlin; or, The Child hath found his Father,<sup>2</sup> in the composition of which the publishers declared that Shakspeare had assisted; but of this there is no proof.<sup>3</sup>

It is well known that Dryden, as well as Milton, intended to write an Arthurian epic, but never carried out the plan. Yet Dryden went so far as to write a dramatic opera<sup>4</sup> entitled King Arthur, or The British Worthly, in which Merlin figures as one of the characters. The author drew freely on his invention, and reproduced very little of the Arthur or Merlin of the romances. As Sir Walter Scott well observes: "He [Arthur] is not in this drama the formidable possessor of Excalibur, and the superior of the chivalry of the Round Table; nor is Merlin the fiend-born necromancer of whom antiquity related and believed so many wonders. They are the prince and magician of a beautiful fairy tale, the story of which, abstracted from the poetry, might have been written by Madame D'Aunois."<sup>5</sup>

The epic was reserved for Sir Richard Blackmore, who touched the last refinement of dulness in his Prince Arthur, published in ten books in 1695. Merlin figures scarcely at all in the poem (B. vii. p. 202 sqq.), and then in a character absurdly out of keeping with all traditions. The worthy doctor depicts a British sorcerer who had been driven out of the British State and had sided with the Saxons. The magician essayed to help the Saxon Octa, but suddenly,

“A Warmth Divine his Spirits did invade,
And once a Sorcerer a Prophet made.
The Heav’nly Fury Merlin did constrain
To Bless, whom he to Curse design’d in vain.”—p. 205.

Twice he thus plays the part of Balaam, then flees before the angry Octa (p. 207), and is seen no more.

In 1736 appeared two attempts to dramatize a portion of the story of Merlin. The first was a mere alteration by Giffard<sup>1</sup> of Dryden’s King Arthur, and bore the title Merlin or the British Inchanter, and King Arthur the British Worthy; A Dramatic Opera. The second piece is a versified drama preserved in a fragment without a title-page (pp. 33–40) and entitled The Royal Chace, or Merlin’s Hermitage and Cave.<sup>2</sup> In the same group of revivals of Merlin, is to be counted the pantomime opera, Merlin in Love, which the poet and dramatist Aaron Hill (1685–1749–50) ventured to write.<sup>3</sup> This production, of very slender merit, practically closes the list of the older literary works in which Merlin figures. Yet one might <sup>1</sup> Of Giffard we know little. William Cushing remarks (Anonyms, p. 423, Cambridge, U.S.A., 1890) that he was “an actor, and long the manager of the old theatre in Goodman’s Fields; under his management Mr. Garrick made his first appearance in London.” Here the piece was first acted; and it was published in 8vo., London, 1736.

<sup>2</sup> The copy I refer to is in the British Museum. The date and place of publication are to some extent conjectural, but it is reasonably certain that the play appeared in London in 1736.

probably glean from the poets and prose-writers a considerable number of allusions not here noted.<sup>1</sup>

Besides these serious attempts to make literary use of the great enchanter, there appeared in the course of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries a considerable number of general prophecies and almanac predictions which were fathered upon the national prophet. Merlin's name had long ceased to be a name to conjure with, but nothing was more natural than to take advantage of his celebrity in order to help the sale of catchpenny pamphlets of a prophetic character. A good type of the prophet of that day was William Lilly (1602-1682), the most celebrated of the English astrologers of the seventeenth century.<sup>2</sup> He won notoriety at the time of the Puritan uprising against Charles I., and under the name of Merlinus Anglicus published among many other predictions England's Propheticall Merline foretelling to all nations of Europe.

Lilly's prophecies were forerunners of a long series of predictions, the titles of which I will enumerate without discussion. It will be noted toward the close of the list that the prophetic character is well-nigh lost :—

- 1.—A Prophesie [of Merlin] concerning Hull in Yorkshire, 1642. 4to.
- 2.—The Lord Merlin's Prophecy<sup>3</sup> concerning the King of Scots ; foretelling the strange and wonderfull Things that shall befall him in England. As also The time and manner of a dismal and fatall Battel. Lond., Aug. 22, 1651. 4to.
- 3.—Merlin Reviv'd, or an old Prophecy found in a Manuscript in Pontefract Castle in Yorkshire. (In verse.) Lond. 1681. Another ed. 1682. Fol.

“ Did ever Proteus, Merlin, any witch.”—Sat. III. 152.

“ Extols old Bards, or Merlin's Prophecy.”—Sat. V. 132.

“ When Merlin's Cave is half unfurnish'd yet.”—Sat. V. 355.

In the miscellaneous pamphlets just cited the fame of the great prophet had sunk to its nadir; but with the rise of Romanticism Merlin again found a place of honour. Early in the present century Sir Walter Scott introduced him as a leading character into one of the most graceful of his romantic poems, The Bridal of Triermain (1813).

The great enchanter Merlin had long been resting in his grave

<sup>1</sup> In addition to these pamphlets, all of which bear a more or less prophetic stamp, there are several other fugitive productions, which I cannot describe more precisely, but which may be classed with the English Ephemerides. Such are: Merlin's Almanack and Prognostications, Merlin's Prognostications, The Mad-merry Merlin, The Royal Merlin, etc.

Even in our own day Merlin's name has not infrequently served as a pseudonym.<sup>a</sup> Under this name Alfred Tennyson contributed two poems to the Examiner (Lond. 1852) with the titles: The Third of February, 1852, and Hands All Round. Of less note are Merlin=Milner; Merlin the Second=David Henry. Merlin was the pseudonym of Dr. Alex. Wilder, from 1864 to 1870 the New York correspondent of the Boston Daily Advertiser.

in the rock, when Gyneth, the fair daughter of Gwendolen and Arthur, was offered in marriage to the knight who should prove himself bravest in the tournament. From all sides the knights of the Round Table gathered for the contest. As the combat thickened, the proud maiden saw without pity one knight fall after another, till at length young Vanoc, of the race of Merlin, died at her very feet. Then suddenly arose out of the earth, in the midst of the lists, the form of Merlin, who with stern gesture pronounced sentence upon her—

“Thou shalt bear thy penance lone
In the valley of Saint John,
And this weird shall overtake thee;
Sleep, until a knight shall wake thee,
For feats of arms as far renown’d
As warrior of the Table Round.”

—CANTO II. STANZA xxvi.

For five hundred years the maiden slept her enchanted sleep within a mighty castle, till at length she was awakened by the Baron of Triermain, Sir Roland de Vaux, who braved the dangers of the Hall of Fear, and defied the snares

“Spread by Pleasure, Wealth, and Pride.”

—CANTO III. STANZA xxxvi.

When he entered the magic bower where the maiden slept in her ivory chair, she awoke suddenly from her slumber, while the magic halls melted away amid the flash of lightning and the roll of thunder. But safe in the arms of the bold knight lay the princess, and with him she went to be his bride.

The two leading motives of the piece—the summoning of an enchanter, and the magic sleep of a princess who is to be awakened by a brave knight—are familiar and threadbare enough; but Scott, while missing some of the naïve simplicity of the verse romance of the Middle Ages, has invested the narrative with a grace and beauty not often found in his models.<sup>1</sup>

Very different from Scott's somewhat conventional enchanter is the Merlin of Tennyson's tale of Vivien (1859), in which the poet tells how Merlin was beguiled by the wily temptress who had vainly endeavoured to seduce "the blameless king." The story is too familiar to need recalling; but we may note that in this poem Tennyson differs widely from the sources that he usually follows so closely. Nowhere in the old romances does the character of Vivien appear in such a malignant light. In the prose romance of Merlin (p. 681) she desired to have him ever with her, and for this she wrought upon him the enchantment that he had himself taught her; and while it seemed to him that he was in the fairest and strongest tower in the world there were few hours of the day or of the night when she was not with him. But though the maiden went in and out when she would, Merlin never came forth from the fortress in which he was imprisoned.

According to Malory's Morte Darthur (B. IV. ch. 1), Nyneue, the lady of the lake, imprisoned Merlin in a rock wrought by enchantment. He had been tempting her to give him her love, but "she was euer passynge wery of hym, and fayne wold haue ben delyuerd of hym."

The novelist Thomas Love Peacock introduces Myrddin Gwyllt (sic: the name should, of course, be Myrddin Wyllt, or Merlin the Wild) into his romance of The Misfortunes of Elphin (1829). Merlin here takes part in a song-contest with the other Welsh bards, and sings the Avallenau or Song of the Apple-trees. (Reprinted, Lond. 1891.)

In a ballad of unknown age, a "Fragment of Child Rowland and Bard Ellen," the eldest brother of the lost maid Ellen goes to the Warluck Merlyn (Myrddin Wyldt, sic) and asks his advice. Merlin gives the desired instructions. Child Rowland proceeds to the Castle of Elfland, rescues his sister from the king, and brings back her and the two brothers in search of whom she had gone. The portion of the ballad relating to Merlin is lost, but has been supplied from an oral narration. Cf. Eng. and Scottish Ballads, ed. by F. J. Child, i. 416-423. Boston, 1857.

Tennyson has borrowed little more than the hint of his leading motives. Yet this poem, steeped as it is in the personality of the poet, gives us a picture of the last days of Merlin which, in its depth and colour, may be sought elsewhere in vain. The mysterious charm of the old Celtic legend has here lost none of its glamour; and while the venomous insinuations of the wily harlot well-nigh destroy the beauty of some passages, yet the strange spell that one feels in The Lady of Shalott and The Passing of Arthur, recurs now and again in this legend of the enchanted sleep of Merlin.

Merlin has inspired nothing of recent years to compare with Vivien, but the enchanter figures once more in Tennyson's Merlin and the Gleam (1889) and in a poem by Robert Buchanan—Merlin and the White Death.<sup>1</sup>

We are perhaps hardly bound to notice the appearance of Merlin in Mark Twain's burlesque romance, A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur, though it is to be feared that the irreverent mind of this unheroic century will find as much entertainment in the farcical burlesque as in the serious romance of six centuries ago.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE EARLY FORMS OF THE LEGEND.

WE have traced in outline the Merlin legend in the various forms which it has assumed in the literature of Europe. We must now go back a little, and endeavour to follow in some detail the development of the legend from the earlier forms. But before we can study the legend itself we are compelled to consider briefly the genuineness and authenticity of the literary documents in which it is contained. For the sake of convenience we will glance first at the Latin sources, and then pass to the Welsh literature. The first name to consider is Nennius.

It is not easy to overestimate the importance for the history of the Arthurian romances, and especially for the history of Merlin, of this obscure little chronicle. One can find in the extant Celtic literature little or nothing that throws light on the sources of the romantic Merlin legend. But in this short recital we have in embryo<sup>1</sup> one of the most characteristic and interesting portions of the legend afterwards developed in the French romance. It is in fact, as de la Borderie remarks, "the first and the most ancient collection of the popular legends of Britain, which later gave birth to the romances of Brut, of Merlin, of Arthur—in a word, the immense cycle of the chivalric epics of the Round Table."<sup>2</sup> We may then agree with Milton that Nennius is "a very trivial author," without losing sight of the immense importance of the Historia Britonum in the development of the legendary history of Britain. It will therefore be worth our while to pause for a moment and review the varying opinions that have been advanced with regard to the authorship and the age of the book.

As to the authorship, we need scarcely remark that Nennius is a mere name used, as de la Borderie suggests, to cover our ignorance of the real author. For a time Gildas was credited with the book, but this hypothesis is now universally abandoned. Among other conjectures we may note that Paulin Paris<sup>3</sup> supposed the Historia Britonum to be the work of an Armorican which was brought into England early in the twelfth century. But critics are now generally agreed that this little chronicle is "essentially an insular creation."<sup>1</sup> Mr. Skene supposes that the Historia was "originally written in British in Cumbria or y Gogledd[d] (the North), and was afterwards translated into Latin."<sup>2</sup> It is of course made up of several parts of varying age. If we exclude the interpolations we have, according to de la Borderie,<sup>3</sup> the original core of the work, which may be analyzed as follows:—

1. Descriptio Britanniae.
2. Origo Britonum Scotorumque.
3. Britannia sub Romanis.
4. Historia Guortigerni.
5. Arthuri gesta.

For our immediate purpose we are concerned chiefly with the "Historia Guortigerni."

The age of the Chronicle has given rise to a great variety of opinions. In the preface to his text of Nennius, Mr. J. Stevenson (Eng. Hist. Soc. 1838) remarks (p. v.): "We may despair of being able to decide, with any degree of accuracy, either as to the age, the historical value, or the authorship of this composition." In Skene's opinion "The text of the Historia Britonum was first put together . . . as early as the seventh century."<sup>4</sup> His opinion is followed in Glennie's Essay on Arthurian Localities<sup>5</sup> (pp. xxxvii. and cvii.). Nash, <sup>1</sup> De la Borderie, L'Hist. Brit. attribuée à Nennius, p. vii. We ought not, however, entirely to overlook Wright's remark (On the Lit. Hist. of Geoff. of Monmouth, Lond. 1848, 4to.) that the earlier manuscripts of Nennius appear to have been written abroad, and in fact never to have been in England, but to have been brought from France.

Both Mr. Skene and Dr. Guest accept the historical authority of Nennius. I much regret not to have seen Mr. Phillimore's articles and notes in Y Cymmrodor, vols. ix. and xi., on various points connected with Nennius and Merlin.

in his introduction to the Romance of Merlin, thinks that the Historia was "probably written as early as the eighth century."<sup>1</sup> By far the larger proportion of later critics have fixed upon the ninth century. Schoell, writing in 1851, made a strong argument<sup>2</sup> in favour of the year 822 A.D. He is followed by de la Borderie<sup>3</sup> and by Ebert.<sup>4</sup> The interpolated Prologue<sup>5</sup> of the Historia (sec. 2) assigns the date of the compilation to the year 858 A.D., but this is not accepted by the critics. Gaston Paris criticizes de la Borderie's argument, and rejects the date 822 for 878.<sup>6</sup> In the Histoire Littéraire de la France (xxx. p. 4), G. Paris merely remarks that the Historia was composed in the ninth century. Paulin Paris had already taken the same ground,<sup>7</sup> though confessing that the earliest manuscripts were of the twelfth century. Still more cautious than these critics are those who merely say that the pseudo-Nennius was put together between the seventh and the ninth centuries.<sup>8</sup> Ten Brink<sup>9</sup> speaks of the age of the Paris selects for his purpose a Mervin who died in 903, and began (perhaps) to reign about 874. His fourth year would be, then, 878.

<sup>9</sup> Gesch. der engl. Lit. i. 169. Berlin, 1877. Mr. Phillimore, who is recognized as the best authority on Nennius, sends me the following note on the date of Nennius: "One of the two oldest MSS. of Nennius (Harl. 3859, now said by Mr. E. M. Thompson to be of the early 12th century), which contains the short Welsh chronicle and Anglo-Saxon Genealogies (briefly known as the Saxon Genealogies or Genealogiæ), has annexed to it, in the same or contemporary hands, Welsh annals and genealogies (only found in this MS.) which must, from the way they end, have been written between 954 and 988, as I have shewn in Y Cymmrodor, vol. ix., in my preface to these Annales Cambriæ and Old Welsh Genealogies from Harl. MS. 3859." Now this MS. and its three sister MSS. (de la Borderie, who adds other MSS. containing these Genealogiæ Regum Saxonum, is altogether wrong: the MSS.

Historia as highly doubtful, and possibly not much earlier than Geoffrey of Monmouth, but in this opinion he has little or no following.

We see, however, that in spite of considerable differences of opinion, the critics are agreed in placing Nennius earlier than Geoffrey of Monmouth, and, with few exceptions, in the ninth century. As already remarked, the question as to the historical value of Nennius is for our purpose of no great importance; but we must take the Historia Britonum as the original source of one of the most characteristic of the legends relating to Merlin,<sup>1</sup> and as the only original we can find for much of Geoffrey's Historia.

De la Borderie does, indeed, attempt to make out a case for the so-called Historia Britannica, which he would like to regard as the intermediate link between Nennius and Geoffrey; but he has succeeded in convincing few besides himself. The fragments of this very dubious history date, according to him, from the year 1019 A.D.<sup>2</sup> "Like the Historia Britonum of Nennius, in question either do not contain them or are not MSS. of Nennius) are very similar, except for the unique additions to one of them, and must, as can be proved, all go back immediately to one prototype. This prototype, ergo, must be older than 954. But this edition of the Saxon Genealogies is necessarily more modern as an edition (though it may be preserved in other MSS.) than the edition of Nennius without the said Genealogies, but with other accretions to the original work. Now this older edition is the one of which MSS. are most numerous. Moreover, the "Sax.-Gen." edition, besides its accretion of the Sax.-Gen., has the orthography of the Welsh names modernized from the older edition. But the older edition has already accretions (the Mirabilia) and changes, which mark it off as more modern than the edition of the Vatican MS. (the oldest known), which is said to be of the tenth century. We may, therefore, judge how far beyond 954 Nennius can be certainly predicated to be. But take 954 as the earliest possible date for the composition of Nennius (which it is not, by far), and, as Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia was issued 1120-1130, or thereabouts, there is a difference of 170 or 180 years."

the Historia Britannica," he remarks, "is the work of the imagination of the insular and not of the Armorican Britons."<sup>1</sup> Now then, argues de la Borderie, "the book of Nennius, the Historia Britannica, the work of Geoffrey, represent the three successive stages of the legend in its development from the British sources. Nennius, or the Historia Britonum, is the egg; the Historia Britannica is the chicken; the Historia Regum Britanniae is the superb and noisy (bruyant) cock, who chants his fanfare to the great orchestra."<sup>2</sup> He goes on to suggest<sup>3</sup> that the Historia Britannica is the identical book that was brought from Britain by Walter, archdeacon of Oxford,<sup>4</sup> for the use of Geoffrey of Monmouth. Britain, we are told, means the British (Welsh) portion of the Island of Great Britain, as opposed to the English portion.

It must be confessed that this is a large theory on a very narrow basis. We have but four small pages of the Historia Britannica. One paragraph is given to Arthur: of Merlin, we find no mention. How so careful a critic as de la Borderie could have propounded a theory so lacking in proof is not easy to see. As Gaston Paris points out,<sup>5</sup> if this Anglo-Latin book existed and was known in Armorica, English historians of that day might fairly be expected to know of dont l'existence est constatée et testée en 1019 par le prêtre Guillaume, auteur de la Vie de saint Gouëznou. Mais—comme l'œuvre de Nennius, forme rudimentaire de la légende, comme le livre de Geoffroi qui en marque l'épanouissement,—cette forme intermédiaire appartient exclusivement, par son inspiration et sa rédaction aux Bretons de l'île, et il n'est nullement prouvé—au contraire—que l'exemplaire qu'en posséda Gautier d'Oxford sortît de l'Armorique," etc.—Ibid. p. 108.

It is quite unnecessary to go into detail in treating of the life of Geoffrey of Monmouth.<sup>1</sup> For our purpose it is enough to note that he was an ecclesiastic who became Archdeacon of Monmouth, that from 1152 to 1154, the year of his death, he was Bishop of St. Asaph, and that between 1130-1150 he wrote three works now generally<sup>2</sup> accepted as his—the Prophetia Merlini (before 1136),<sup>3</sup> the Historia Regum Britannie (about 1136),<sup>4</sup> and the Vita Merlini (between 1140 and 1150).

The Prophetia was afterwards incorporated with the Historia, of which it now forms the seventh book.<sup>1</sup>

The first question naturally arising with regard to each of these books is: From what materials are they constructed? In searching for the sources of Geoffrey's Historia it is hardly possible to advance far.<sup>2</sup> The most obvious source is the Historia Britonum of Nennius. As for the British book brought from the Continent by Archdeacon Walter of Oxford, we know nothing about it, and we gain little by multiplying conjectures

<sup>1</sup> On the Prophecies, Professor Henry Morley has the following remark, the last clause of which is a good example of the baseless statements that have found their way into so many works on the literature of the period we are treating:—"Afterwards he made alterations, and formed the work into eight books; to which he added Merlin's Prophecies translated out of Cymric verse into Latin prose."—English Writers, iii. 45.

Compare with the above note the following:—

"That Geoffrey drew his materials from British sources, and did not coin any of them, seems to us the legitimate conclusion to be drawn from a careful study of the whole subject. His book is, however, a compilation and not a translation, at all events no book now exists which can be regarded as his original, while all the Bruts or chronicles are posterior to Geoffrey's book and based upon it."—Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., art. Celtic Lit.

On the specific question of the origin of Geoffrey's Merlin, A. Brandl remarks:—

"Ähnlich bunt mag Geoffrey die Figur des Merlin, des Propheten beim letzten Brittenkönig Vortigern, zusammengestellt haben, mit Elementen aus der Legende von St. Germanus, aus druidischer Mystik, aus Daniel und den XV. Signa ante judicium, nach deren Art Merlin schliesslich den Weltuntergang weissagt."—Paul's Grundriss der germ. Philologie, ii. 621.

with regard to it. Paulin Paris<sup>1</sup> supposed that the Latin chronicle of Nennius was the original text or a translation of the famous British book. Of course this is not impossible, but hardly probable.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Those who are interested in the question may follow it up in Ward's Catalogue of Romances, i. p. 214 sqq., where the views of P. Paris are controverted, and the whole matter discussed at length. Mr. Ward thinks that a Breton book may have existed:—

“But there are really some grounds for supposing that Walter left behind him a book, resembling Geoffrey's Historia, yet distinct from it, though there is nothing to prove whether it was his own composition or the book which he brought from abroad.”—p. 214.

“The Breton book, then, we hold, was not a mere copy of Nennius. At the same time it is evident that whoever drew up the scheme of the present Historia had the work of Nennius before him, and made arbitrary changes in certain facts derived from it.”—p. 217.

Mr. Ward remarks further on the origin of Geoffrey's Historia: “But the Arthur legend had travelled south, and had been immensely developed, before the days of Geoffrey. At all events, it was not he who invented the fiction, that Arthur was born and mortally wounded in Cornwall. The monks of Laon,<sup>a</sup> who visited Cornwall in 1113, were shown rocks called Arthur's Chair and Arthur's Furnace, and were told that this was his native land, ‘secundum fabulas Britanorum regis Arturi’; and at Bodmin they narrowly escaped bloodshed when they refused to believe that Arthur was still alive. (See Hermannus, De miraculis S. Mariæ Laudunensis, book ii. 15, 16, republished by Migne, Patrologia, tom. 156, col. 983.) These monks also inform us that similar Arthurian fables were rife in Brittany. Finally, considering that Geoffrey's Arthur is a grandson of an Armorican prince, and that his Armorican cousin Hoel is his brother in arms both at home and in Gaul; and considering that Cadwalader finds a last hope for his degenerate Bretons in the princes of Armorica; one can hardly doubt Geoffrey's deriving much of the latter part of his Historia from Breton sources. Whether he followed (or, as he terms it, translated) any regular book, or whether he collected materials and arranged them himself, can never be completely decided.”—Ibid. i. 217, 218.

Mr. Ward's opinion may be compared with that of M. Gaston Paris:—“Je suis au contraire tout à fait de l'avis de M. de la Borderie sur la seconde question qu'il traite, celle de la provenance galloise et non bretonne, des fables de Gaufré. Celui-ci prétend à trois reprises avoir trouvé l'histoire des rois bretons dans un livre écrit Britannico sermone, que lui avait fait connaître son ami Gautier, archidiacre d'Oxford. Il ment certainement, car on a prouvé qu'il reproduisait textuellement des phrases latines d'écrivains antérieurs, et que par conséquent il ne traduisait pas du Gallois. Il se contredit d'ailleurs: il prétend à un endroit (xii. 20) qu'il a simplement traduit le livre gallois (in latinum sermonem transferre curavi), et à un autre (xi. 1) il dit qu'il écrit tant d'après ce livre que d'après les récits de Gautier (ut Gaufridus in Britannico prefato sermone invenit et a Gualtero Oxinefordensi audivit). La vérité est à mon sens, dans cette dernière phrase. C'est avec l'Historia Britonum d'une part et les récits de son ami Gautier, ainsi que ses propres souvenirs de contes gallois d'autre part que Gaufrei a composé son roman. Quant au fameux livre gallois, il a existé : les formes de beaucoup de noms propres de l'Historia regum, formes souvent plus archaïques que celles de Nennius . . . et que Gaufrei n'a pu inventer, montrent qu'il a eu sous les yeux des documents fort anciens ; en quoi ils consistaient, et s'ils contenaient autre chose que des listes de noms propres, c'est ce qu'il faudrait étudier de près. Mais pourquoi, en parlant de ce livre, Gaufrei dit-il que Gautier le lui a 'apporté de Bretagne' (ex Britannia advexit) ? On a compris jusqu'à présent que Britannia désignait ici la Petite-Bretagne." G. Paris follows de la Borderie in thinking Great Britain to be meant, and indeed the whole of it, and not Wales, as de la Borderie supposed. He continues :—"L'explication du problème est, à mon sens, bien plus simple. Toute la difficulté repose sur ce point : puisque Gaufrei était en Grande-Bretagne, comment pouvait-on lui apporter un livre de Grande-Bretagne ? Mais il y a pétition de principe. Rien ne nous prouve que Gaufrei fût en Grande-Bretagne quand il écrivait son livre, et il y a même des vraisemblances pour qu'il fût en Normandie. Si Gaufrei était en Normandie, on comprend très bien qu'il prétende que le livre gallois qu'il dit traduire lui a été apporté de Grande-Bretagne par Gautier d'Oxford, et ainsi disparaît toute difficulté sur ce passage. Un mot encore sur les sources de Gaufrei. Il avait très probablement trouvé dans quelque cloître de Normandie un exemplaire de l'Historia Britonum, et, croyant cet ouvrage inconnu en Angleterre, il s'était mis à l'exploiter, en s'aidant de divers auteurs latins, pour en tirer sa grandiose mystification. Il reçut sans doute, pendant qu'il y travaillait, la visite de son ami Gautier d'Oxford, qui lui apporta quelque document gallois, et tout deux arrangèrent en commun l'imposture qui devait avoir tant de succès : il fut convenu que Gautier aurait apporté à Gaufrei une histoire complète des rois bretons, qui contenait toutes les belles choses que celui-ci allait apprendre au monde. On a vu que Gaufrei n'avait même pas su soutenir ce mensonge sans se contredire. Tout ce qui, dans son livre, n'est pas tiré de l'Historia Britonum (ou d'autres ouvrages latins) repose, sauf ce qui pouvait se trouver dans le document en question, sur l'invention ou sur les contes populaires gallois, recueillis par Gautier et par lui. C'est à la critique à s'efforcer de discerner ce qui doit être attribué à l'une ou à l'autre de ces provenances."—Romania, xii. 372-375.

Historia Britonum of Nennius taken as a groundwork, and supplemented by the tales told him by his friend Walter of Oxford, and by his own recollections of Welsh legends. Gaston Paris even admits the existence of a British book, for "the forms of many of the proper names of the Historia Regum are often more archaic than those of Nennius";<sup>1</sup> but M. Paris is careful to remark that Geoffrey did not translate from the Welsh.

From all this discussion may be inferred, as in the case of Nennius, the need of extreme caution in the construction of a theory designed to explain all the facts. Nothing really convincing is to be deduced from the evidence. Some of the theories advanced are not impossible; and with this comfort we must be as content as we can.

As for the Vita Merlini, it also has been the subject of much discussion.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Ward (Catalogue of Romances, i. 278-288) gives an excellent account of the arguments in favour of its genuineness, which is not now seriously questioned by most scholars.<sup>2</sup> <sup>1</sup> For instance, in the Encyclopaedia Britannica (9th ed.) some of the contributors affirm, while others deny, its genuineness. In the article on Romance we read concerning Geoffrey of Monmouth: "His poem on the Life and Prophecies of Merlin was a separate work, published in 1136-1137, and again in 1149"; while in the article on Geoffrey of Monmouth we read: "Internal evidence is fatal to the claims of the second," i.e. the Vita Merlini.

Henry Morley (English Writers, iii. p. 44) says: "There has also been improperly ascribed to him [Geoff. of Mon.] a life of Merlin; in Latin hexameters."

Compare with these authorities the opinion of Gaston Paris:—

"Gaufrei, quelques années après l'Historia, composa un autre ouvrage, la Vita Merlini, poème assez élégamment écrit, où des traditions historiques bretonnes se mêlent à des contes venus d'orient ou courant dans les écoles, et qui n'a pas été sans influence sur quelques romans français postérieurs."—La Litt. Française au moyen Âge, p. 90.

Also: "Gaufrei composa en hexamètres latins sa Vita Merlini, dans laquelle il mêla des notions de géographie et d'histoire naturelle, empruntées aux écrivains classiques, à des contes populaires bretons dont la plupart se retrouvent ailleurs, et à quelques nouvelles prédictions."—Hist. Litt. de la France, xxx. p. 5.

Paulin Paris had already advanced about the same opinion (Romans, i. 77) in opposition to the views of Thomas Wright and Francisque Michel. He says:—

"Il faut absolument en conclure que le poème a été composé avant les romans, c'est à dire de 1140 à 1150. Ainsi tout se réunit pour conserver à Geoffroy de Monmouth l'honneur d'avoir écrit vers le milieu du douzième siècle, le poème De Vita Merlini après l'Historia Britonum que semble continuer le poème pour ce qui touche à Merlin, et avant le roman français de Merlin, qui devait faire un poème d'assez nombreux emprunts."

<sup>2</sup> The earliest printed edition appeared in 1833 for the Roxburghe Club, under the editorship of William Henry Black. This edition was fortunately limited to forty-two copies; for it was as bad as bad could be. The second, and in fact the only edition based upon the manuscripts,<sup>a</sup> is that of Wright and Michel, since

For convenience we may defer all further account of the Vita Merlini and the other Latin sources till we have examined the extant Celtic literature that tells us of Myrddin the Bard. Here, too, we find it necessary in the first place to determine the genuineness of the Welsh poems that touch upon Myrddin. We cannot here attempt an exhaustive discussion, but we may trace in a few words the varying attitude of critical opinion toward the few poems that concern the question before us, and set in order the results of the investigations which none but advanced Celtic specialists are competent to make. The data are so meagre that we may perhaps never hope to get more than a probable solution of the difficulties starting up at every turn. There is here a tempting field for an ingenious constructive critic, for in this matter one can conjecture much and prove little.

One caution, however, we should observe from the outset. We must not forget that it is one thing to find in Welsh poems of doubtful age a meagre account of a bard named Myrddin, and in a modern Breton ballad or two the figure of Myrddin<sup>1</sup> the Bard and Myrddin the Enchanter, and quite another thing to show that these throw any real light on the legend as we find it in the French prose romance of Merlin. If we accept the genuineness of the poems ascribed to Myrddin or which make mention of him,—and there is really no great harm in doing so,—we have advanced scarcely a step in tracing out the source of the legend as found in Nennius, in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia, or in any of the translations or imitations of Geoffrey's Historia. As the investigation proceeds, we shall hardly be able to escape the conclusion that—whether or not we accept Geoffrey's story of the Breton book—he based his work upon materials almost, if not quite, independent of any preserved to us in Welsh literature. This Welsh literature is of great interest in that it shows us how the legendary history might have arisen, but it affords a very slender basis for a working theory as to the origin of the French romance.

San-Marte did no more than to reprint the text and annotate it. Our edition of the Vita Merlini really dates, therefore, from 1837, when it appeared under the title: "Galfridi de Monumeta . . . Vita Merlini. Vie de Merlin attribuée à Geoffroy de Monmouth . . . par Francisque Michel et Thomas Wright. Parisiis, Silvestre, London, W. Pickering, 1837." This edition has become rare.

San-Marte follows Michel and Wright in rejecting Geoffrey of Monmouth as the author, and thinks the poem to have been written soon after 1216. Die Sagen von Merlin, p. 271.

In studying the Celtic literature we shall find it to be no small gain in clearness to put aside at the outset all that is conceded to have nothing to do with either Myrddin or Merlin. The Celtic literature is preserved in three great groups—the Gaelic, the Breton or Armorican, and the Welsh.

I. The first of these groups, the Gaelic, has nothing original relating to Myrddin or Merlin, and it became possessed of the legend of Merlin only through translation. The only piece relating to Merlin of which we have any knowledge in Irish literature is the eleventh-century version of Nennius; while not till many generations later was the verse romance of Arthur and Merlin translated into Irish prose.<sup>1</sup> The fact that so scanty use was made of the legend, even in its borrowed form, is a sufficient proof that the historical bard and the legendary prophet were strangers to the great body<sup>2</sup> of old Irish literature.

II. It would hardly be necessary to consider the extant Armorican literature at all, were it not that Villemarqué, in a series of studies<sup>3</sup> in Celtic literature, made great capital out of Marzin ballads that he pretended to have found in Brittany.

<sup>2</sup> How great this body of Irish literature is may be seen from the estimate of a learned German, who has calculated that to publish all the Irish literature, inclusive of MSS. from the eleventh to the sixteenth century, would require about a thousand volumes, 8vo. Cf. Jubainville, La Litt. Celtique, i. 43.

Modern criticism rejects the ballads relating to Marzin the Bard<sup>1</sup> and Marzin the Enchanter, and pronounces them "impositions, of which," as Mr. Phillimore assures me, "no original or basis has been found in the country." The authenticity of the Barzaz-Breiz, as a whole, has been the subject of considerable discussion, but the question does not belong here.<sup>2</sup> We are chiefly concerned to know that the literature of Brittany is scarcely older than the fifteenth century,<sup>3</sup> and that it maintained its precarious existence only by borrowing from the Latin and the French.<sup>4</sup> We cannot deny the possible existence of Armorican literary documents more ancient than any now extant, but we are quite in the dark as to what they may have contained concerning Merlin. Even though we were to grant that the ballads on Marzin, instead of being modern forgeries, are based on genuine Breton traditions, we should find them of little service for our purpose. Considered as contributions to folklore they would then possess a certain degree of interest, but the assistance they would render in determining out of what materials our romance was formed would be exceedingly slight.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Villemarqué asserted the forged poem on Marzin the Bard to be earlier than the age of chivalry, and to belong to a time between the sixth and the tenth century. San-Marte, on the other hand, was inclined to refer it to the fourteenth century (Sagen von Merlin, p. 230), and to regard it, along with the short poem on Marzin the Enchanter, as an interesting proof that Merlin was known in a twofold character among a people who, like the insular Britons, regarded Merlin as one of their own countrymen.

<sup>5</sup> We are dealing primarily with origins, but we may note that Merlin figures in a Breton drama entitled Buhez Santez Nonn, or Life of Sainte Nonne and of her son St. Devy (F. Michel, Vita Merlini, p. lxxxiii.), and that very recently Louise d'Isole

III. In the face of these facts we must therefore confine our attention to the remaining branch of Celtic literature—the Cymric or Welsh. This, however, affords us much less light than might be desired. The most detailed accounts of Merlin Ambrosius<sup>1</sup> that we find in Welsh literature are contained in the so-called Bruts,<sup>2</sup> but these need detain us only a moment; for we need no longer refute Villemarqué's opinion<sup>3</sup> that the has brought out a poem entitled Merlin, poème breton, 2<sup>e</sup> éd. revue et corrigée, avec une préface de Louis Frechette, Paris, 1877, 12mo. The Buhez Santez Nonn has been recently edited with a translation in the Revue Celtique.

<sup>1</sup> Or Myrddin Emrys. In referring to Welsh literature I shall usually adopt this spelling. On the form of the name Mr. E. G. B. Phillimore sends me the following note:—"The only possible variant in modern Welsh is Myrddin Emraï. Ambrosius makes both Emrys and Emraï in Welsh: in Middle and Old Welsh these would be written with an i or y, or even an e for the y, and a regular ei with a possible variant e for the modern ai; of course, some people—archaic purists who despise the modern ai—would spell Emreis now. As to Myrddin, it is the only form in current Welsh. Dd in modern Welsh is equal to the th in the, that, this, etc. In Old and Middle Welsh they had practically no character for it; the barred d (ð, ȝ or the like) occurring, but being very rare. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries both the ȝ and the dh were used, but finally disused for the dd. For the y of Myrddin, e, i, or y would be used in Old and Middle Welsh. The sound is that of French mute e: in the oldest Welsh would probably be written o, but Mordin does not occur. It was often written ; from the sixteenth to the eighteenth century by certain scholars and writers. Myrdin is simply the Middle Welsh orthography. Marzin is Villemarqué's deliberate Bretonization of the word. They have not the sound of d in Breton, except, I believe, in one or two sub-dialects: z takes the place in usual Breton of both sounds, th in the, and th in thing. The barred ȝ of Professor Rhys' Hibbert Lectures is meant to guide people who are puzzled by the barbarous Welsh dd. Nor have they in Breton the "obscure" sound of Welsh ;; so Villemarqué altered it into a, their nearest sound. Skene's Welsh orthography is not consistent. He uses modern, Middle, and Old Welsh forms promiscuously and indiscriminately."

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Phillimore notes that "Brut is derived, not from an originally Welsh word, but from the word Brutus through Norman-French or English. It was used to mean a chronicle in these languages, and derived from Brutus, as in Wace's Brut. Originally it meant a chronicle beginning with Brutus or the like. The history of the transference of the word to Welsh is all that is obscure. In Rhys and Evans' Bruts from the Red Book of Hergest (Oxford, 1890), this question is gone into in a note in the preface. The word Brut for a chronicle occurs in Welsh before it does in English MSS., but that proves nothing."

Brut y Brenhinoedd (or the Brut Tysilio) was the British original of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia. This, like the other Bruts, is later<sup>1</sup> than Geoffrey of Monmouth, and obviously based upon his work.<sup>2</sup>

The Welsh Triads make mention of Myrddin, but they are of no great importance for our purpose. The details are discussed in the footnote.<sup>3</sup>

Mr. Phillimore remarks that "er Brenined is a gross blunder for y Brenhinoedd—the usual plural of Brenin 'a king'—though Brenhinedd also occurs in Middle Welsh; y means the; er does not exist."

"The Triads simply consist of parts or characters taken from early (pre-seventh century) Cymric, and rarely Cornish, history and legend grouped by threes according to some salient characteristic, e.g. 'The three liberal kings were so and so,' etc.; 'The three felon axe-blows were so and so,' etc." "There are several collections of the Triads, the two oldest existing in MSS. of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries (call these two a and b), and others (with a few new ones not found in a and b) in MSS. of the fifteenth century. All or most of these collections were pieced together by Robert Vaughan, of Hengwrt, the great Welsh collector of MSS., who died about 1667. He used some versions of the fifteenth century, which have never been published, and one at least which I cannot trace. Let us call this mosaic (c). Now, sometime—when it cannot exactly be said, but between 1600 and 1800—some one got hold of a great many—not all—of the old versions of the Triads, and also of a later (probably fifteenth-century) compilation called the 'Triads of the Twenty-four Knights,' and served them up with much additional detail and verbiage, and occasionally with important new matter, mostly not found elsewhere. This version, the fullest of all, was first printed in the Myvyrian Archaiology, vol. 2, and no MS. of it older than the eighteenth century is known to exist, though I do not believe that it was then concocted. Call this (d). Now (d) is often known, most misleadingly, as 'The Welsh Triads' or 'The Welsh Historical Triads' par excellence. I may add that—1. Robert Vaughan's piecework version (c); 2. the Red Book of Hergest version (b); and 3. the late or spurious rechauffée version (d), are printed in this order in the Myvyrian Archaiology, and are thence quoted by Rhys in his Hibbert Lectures as Versions 1, 2, 3, respectively (b has since been printed with absolute correctness).

Now, with this light let us come to what Skene says (and de la Borderie purports to quote or refer to in Les Véritables Prophéties de Merlin). In Celtic Scotland, vol. I. pp. 23, 24, we read: 'Among the Welsh documents which are usually founded upon as affording materials for the early history of the country, there is one class of documents contained in the Myvyrian Archaiology which cannot be accepted as genuine. The principal of them are the so-called Historical Triads, which have been usually quoted as possessing undoubted claims to antiquity under

A word ought to be given to the Mabinogion, though we really get from them no light on Myrddin. These are a collection of prose tales, a number of which tell of Arthur and the knights of his court. Merlin (Myrddin) is not mentioned the name of the Welsh Triads . . . . In a former work [p. 24] the author in reviewing these documents [the said Triads and others with which we have nothing to do here, many of which were certainly not concocted in the eighteenth century as Skene thought] merely said, "It is not unreasonable, therefore, to say that they must be received with some suspicion, and that very careful discrimination is required in the use of them." He does not hesitate now to reject them as entirely spurious.' Skene here appends a footnote (No. 15) with the very reservation which de la Borderie ignores — 'See Four Ancient Books of Wales, vol. I. pp. 30-32. In rejecting the Welsh Triads which have been so extensively used, the author excepts those Triads which are to be found in ancient MSS., such as the Triads of the Horses in the Black Book of Caermarthen; those in the Hengwrt MS. 536, printed in the Four Ancient Books of Wales, vol. II. p. 457; and those in the Red Book of Hergest.'

Skene says also in the work cited, I. p. 172, in a note (No. 11): 'The author confines himself as much as possible to Welsh documents before his [Geoffrey of Monmouth's] time, and the so-called Historical Triads he rejects as entirely spurious.' Also at pp. 195, 196 he says (end of p. 195): 'The Welsh Triads say that the Picts came from Llychlyn, which is Scandinavia.' . . . (p. 196 end): 'The Welsh Triads which contain the passage referred to may now be regarded as spurious.' The passage referred to, with much other ethnological matter, occurs in (a), but in no other collection of Triads. Skene further says in note 50 on p. 197: 'Neither does he refer to the so-called Historic Triads, because he considers them spurious; but among the genuine "Triads of Arthur and his Warriors"' [these are those contained in the Hengwrt MSS. 54 and 536]. 'Ib. [in the Four Ancient Books of Wales] vol. II. p. 457, there is one to this effect: "Three oppressions came to this island and did not go out of it"' (p. 8).

What Skene means, and what I mean, by 'genuine' is, that the authors wrote down actual tradition or legend which they found to hand; by 'spurious,' that the authors invented some at least of what they record, out of their own heads. The genuine Triads do not purport to be written at any particular date. The oldest MSS. are of about 1225 and 1275 for (a), and 1300-1325, for (b), but contain archaisms and errors of transcription which carry them back each, say, from fifty to a hundred years in their present form. But how much older some of the Triads may or may not be no one can say! Of course (a) is genuine in so far as it copies the older Triads, which it mostly does. Some of its additions and alterations are demonstrably spurious, and the rest cannot be relied upon unless and until corroborated from other sources which have not the same taint."

In the light of Mr. Phillimore's remarks we note that we have two Triads relating to Merlin, both from version (a).

The first I quote is No. 125, which "is entirely peculiar to (a)." This enumerates: "Three principal bards of the Isle of Britain, Myrddin Emrys, Myrddin, son of Morvryn, Taliessin, chief of the bards." Cf. also J. Loth, Les Mabinogion, II.

by name, but the combat of the white with the red dragon is found in the story of Llud and Llevelis, much the same as in Nennius and Geoffrey of Monmouth. Criticism has not yet said the last word with regard to the age and authenticity of these tales.<sup>1</sup> But the three romances of Owein and Lunet, Peredur ab Errawc, Geraint and Enid, agree in many essentials with the three French romances of Chrestien de Troyes,—the Chevalier au Lyon, Perceval le Gallois, Erec et Enid,—all of which were produced in the last half of the twelfth century.<sup>2</sup> Still, according to Loth,<sup>3</sup> “the three Mabinogion are no more

p. 268; F. Michel, Vita Merlini, p. xvi.; and The Ancient Laws of Cambria, translated from the Welsh by William Probert, 1823, p. 413, Triad 125.

The second (d) (No. 10) tells of: “Three complete disappearances from the isle of Prydein . . . the second is that of Myrddin, the bard of Emrys Wledig, and of his nine Cylveidd, who directed their way by sea toward the House of Glas.” Cf. J. Loth, Les Mabinogion, II. pp. 277, 278. This Triad, as Mr. Phillimore observes, “takes and amplifies one subordinate incident from (a), copied thence in (c), No. 34; but everything concerning Merlin is only in (d). Nor does difancoll mean necessarily ‘complete disappearances’: col is a loss, not a disappearance, and difancoll (difangoll now) means ‘utter loss,’ whether disappearance or destruction. The Isle of Britain was the consecrated term for the undivided Britondom of the sixth and seventh centuries.”

These two Triads just quoted are very late, and, in Mr. Phillimore's opinion, worthless. He adds: “The only allusion to Merlin or his works which I can find in the genuine Triads are in the Triads of Hengwrt MSS. 54 and 536, Skene's Four Ancient Books of Wales, ii. 265—‘The third (concealment and disconcealment<sup>a</sup> of the Isle of Britain was) the dragons which Llud, son of Beli, buried (al. concealed) in Dinas Emreis, in Eryni.’ (Eryni roughly answers to Snowdonia.) There is the same statement in one of the Red-Book Triads; but nothing more that I can find.”

translated from Chrétien de Troyes than the poems of Chrétien de Troyes are translated or imitated from them. They all mount to one common source, that is to say, the French romances written in England and based upon British legends; the originals have disappeared, and we have preserved nothing of them but mutilated imitations. It would perhaps be going too far to affirm that the three Mabinogion are literally translated from the French, but it is very evident that they follow closely a French source. As for the primitive basis of these tales, it is generally admitted to be of Celtic origin. The Celtic legends of the country of Wales were early known by the Normans after the conquests of England."

I have touched upon the Mabinogion, not because the tales yield us much information with regard to Merlin (Myrddin), but because they yield so little. It is certainly rather surprising that a long series of Celtic stories, several of which tell us of Arthur, should make no reference to the great Merlin (Myrddin), unless, indeed, some one chooses to see in this very fact a slight confirmation of the historical character of the bard Myrddin of the sixth century, who had not (as one might urge) been invested in genuine works of Celtic imagination with the legendary character that the enchanter Merlin assumes in the Latin chronicles and the French romances.

There remain to be examined the Welsh poems that contain allusions to Myrddin. If we accept these poems as genuine works of the sixth century, we have nothing more than a few obscure fragments, the full import of which is perhaps even yet not rightly interpreted.

Relics of the Welsh Bards. Following this work appeared in 1792 Dr. Owen Pughe's collection, The Heroic Elegies and other Pieces of Llywarch-Hen. The first really important publication of old Welsh poems was made in the year 1801, when the first two volumes of the Myvyrian Archaiology (sic) of Wales were published by Owen Jones, a London furrier, Edward Williams (Iolo Morganwg) a stone-mason, and William Owen, later known as William Owen Pughe. A third volume followed in 1807.<sup>1</sup> The lively controversy which at once arose over these poems—helped on doubtless by the recollection of the extravagant claims made for MacPherson's pseudo-Gaelic Ossian—was for a time brought to an end by the publication in 1803 of Sharon Turner's Vindication of the genuineness of the Ancient British Poems of Aneurin, Taliessin, Llywarch-Hen, and Myrddin, though, as Gaston Paris remarks, he really proved nothing. Since Turner's day critical opinion has vibrated between alternate acceptance and rejection of these poems. Villemarqué, although a strenuous defender of the Celtic origin of the Merlin (Myrddin) legend, preferred to regard Brittany as the original home of the bard, and did not hesitate to affirm that none of the poems attributed to Myrddin could be accepted as genuine.<sup>2</sup> In 1849 Thomas Stephens published a careful study of these old poems in his Literature of the Kymry. He, too, refused to accept any of the poems as genuine products of the sixth century.<sup>3</sup> Still more careful and critical was the investigation of the entire subject of early Welsh literature by W. F. Skene in the Four Ancient Books of Wales (1868). Here appeared all of the texts of the poems in question with a literal translation,<sup>1</sup> and a series of critical dissertations on the genuineness of the poems. This was the first discussion of the matter on the basis of a really critical text. Mr. Skene's investigations led him to the following conclusions: "That the bards to whom these poems are in the main attributed are recorded as having lived in the sixth century, is certain. We have it on the authority of the Genealogia<sup>2</sup> attached to Nennius, written in the eighth century.<sup>3</sup> That this record of their having lived in that age is true we have every reason to believe, and we may hold that there were such bards as Taliessin, Llywarch-Hen, and Myrddin at that early period, who were believed to have written poems."<sup>4</sup>

Mr. Skene is recognized as a foremost authority on this question, but his views have not won entire acceptance.<sup>5</sup> Yet even if we accept all the poems as genuine and ancient, and include the interpolations as well as the evidently spurious poems rejected by Mr. Skene, we have but a shadowy outline of the personality of the Bard Myrddin. For the sake of

clearness we can perhaps hardly do better than to take up in order each of the Welsh poems that in any way refers to Myrddin. Of these poems eight<sup>1</sup> have been attributed to Myrddin; but they are not all accepted as genuine by either Mr. Skene or M. de la Borderie; nor do these two eminent critics exactly agree with each other as to what is genuine and what is spurious.

These differences of opinion as to just which of these poems were indubitably composed in the sixth century are not reassuring to one who naturally defers to the judgment of recognized specialists in things Celtic. In such a case a layman can hardly do more than silently to place the conflicting opinions side by side, and move on. In our examination we may best begin with the two poems that are least doubtful—The Dialogue between Myrddin and Taliessin, and the Avallenau.<sup>2</sup>

I.—The Dialogue between Myrddin and Taliessin adds but little to our knowledge. Its chief importance for our purpose is that it helps to establish the existence of a bard bearing the name Myrddin.<sup>3</sup> He is represented as talking with Taliessin concerning the battle of Arderydd, and expressing sadness at the slaughter.<sup>4</sup>

In the sixth stanza Taliessin speaks :

“ The host of Maelgwn, it was fortunate that they came—Slaughtering men of battle, penetrating the gory plain, Even the action of Ardderyd [Arderydd], when there will be a crisis,
Continually for the hero they will prepare.”

In the eleventh stanza Myrddin says :

“ Seven-score generous ones have gone to the shades ;
In the wood of Celyddon they came to their end.
Since I, Myrd[d]in, am next after Taliessin, Let my prediction become common.”

II.—The Avallenau, observes Mr. Skene, contains passages (already pointed out by Stephens), “ which could not have been written prior to the time of Henry II.”; but these passages seem to be “interpolations in an older poem.”<sup>1</sup> At best we learn from this poem very little about the personality of the bard,<sup>2</sup> though more than from any other of the Welsh poems.<sup>3</sup>

In addition to these two poems there are a few others of more doubtful age and authenticity, which mention Myrddin and ascribe to him various qualities.

III.—The Porchellanau or Hoianau—one of the poems of

Donc [!] Merlin n'était pas vieux quand il faisait sa pièce des Pommiers [Avallenau] plusieurs années après la bataille d'Arderyd[d].”

The argument that Myrddin could not have been old because he does not talk precisely like some other bard is certainly a surprising one. We have at most but a few lines with which to construct the entire portrait of Myrddin; and from the purely negative considerations presented by M. de la Borderie we are not warranted in drawing so important an inference.

the Black Book of Caermarthen—is rejected by Mr. Stephens and Mr. Skene as being spurious and late. Like the Avalleuau, it contains passages not earlier than the time of Henry II.,<sup>1</sup> and really contains nothing to warrant it in being placed earlier than Geoffrey of Monmouth. De la Borderie, however, regards it as containing a few fragments of Merlin's (Myrddin's) work imbedded in a mass of interpolations.<sup>2</sup>

Myrddin is not mentioned by name in the form, but there is a prediction that,

“All the Cymry will be under the same warlike leader;
His name is Llywelyn, of the line
Of Gwynedd, one who will overcome.”—STANZA I.

And the speaker says of himself:

“Little does R[h]ydderch Hael know to-night at his feast
What sleeplessness last night I bore;
The snow was up to my knees owing to the wariness of the chief,
Icicles hung to my hair: sad is my fate!”—STANZA X.

“Thin is my covering, for me there is no repose,
Since the battle of Ardderyd [Arderydd] it will not concern me, Though the sky were to fall, and sea to overflow.”—STANZA XXV.<sup>3</sup>

IV.—Dialogue between Myrddin and his sister Gwenddydd<sup>4</sup>
(the Cyvoesi).

If we could accept this dialogue as genuine,<sup>1</sup> we should get considerable information from it with regard to Myrddin, but in all probability it is a late piece of work, and consequently of little value for our purpose. Some of the passages are instructive, in that they show how little we learn from these Welsh poems even when they are most specific<sup>2</sup>—

MYRDDIN II. Since the action of Ardderyd [Arderydd] and Erydon, Gwend[d]ydd, and all that will happen to me,
Dull of understanding, to what place of festivity shall I go?

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Skene, Four Anc. Books, i. pp. 234–241, rejects it as spurious, and adds: “The form of the prophecy in the Hoianau is obviously the same as that in the third part of the Cyvoesi, which I consider to have been produced in South Wales in the twelfth century.” And de la Borderie in turn observes: “A nos yeux, si l’on excepte les quinze dernières stances (117–131), dont nous parlerons plus loin, les Kyvoësi est une insipide rapsodie chronologique fabriquée au xii<sup>e</sup> ou au xiii<sup>e</sup> siècle par un barde pédant, qui avait sous les yeux Nennius, Geoffroi de Monmouth, Caradoc de Lancarvan.”—Les Vérit. Proph. de Merlin, pp. 83, 84.

<sup>2</sup> For the entire poem see Four Anc. Books, i. 462 sqq. The Roman numerals in the passages I quote refer to the stanzas.

<sup>3</sup> On this passage the Rev. T. Price (Literary Remains, i. 143, quoted in Four Anc. Books, ii. 424) has an important remark: “It is worthy of note that Gwenddydd in this dialogue addresses Myrddin by the appellation of Llallogan, twin-brother . . .” Now this will explain a passage in the Life of St. Kentigern, in which it is said that there was at the court of R[h]ydderch Hael a certain idiot named Laloicen who uttered predictions. “In curia ejus quidam homo fatuus vocabulo Laloicen;” and in the Scotichronicon it is stated that this Laloicen was Myrddin Wyllt. By connecting these several particulars, we find an air of truth cast over the history of this bard, as regards the principal incidents of his life, and there can be no reason to doubt that some of the poetry attributed to him was actually his composition.”

Mr. Ward also touches upon the same matter in discussing Cott. MS. Titus A. xix. “The prose narrative (at f. 74) of the meeting of Merlin and St. Kentigern (or St. Mungo, the patron saint of Glasgow) may perhaps belong to the imperfect life of St. Kentigern which follows it (f. 76b). This narrative has been abridged by Walter Bower (or Bowmaker), last abbot of Inchcolm (d. 1449), and inserted in his enlarged edition of the Scotichronicon of John Fordun, lib. iii. cap. xxxi. (see Royal 13, E. x. f. 58, and Walter Goodall's edition, of 1759, vol. i. p. 135). But Bower has omitted the pith of the story. Merlin does not receive the sacrament on the first day of meeting; but one day he comes to the "Mellodonor" (or Molen-dinar) brook, near Glasgow, demanding the sacrament, and saying that his death is at hand. He is asked three times how he will die, and each time gives a different answer. Still, St. Kentigern is at last persuaded to administer the sacrament to him. Now it has happened, once upon a time, that he was caught and bound by the petty king ("regulus") Meldredus; that he laughed at seeing the king take an apple-leaf out of his wife's hair; that he was promised freedom if he would state the cause of his laughter, and that he then told of the queen's adultery in the orchard. The queen, in revenge, ordered some shepherds to keep a look-out for him. They see him coming away from St. Kentigern, and pursue him with sticks and stones. He falls dying over a bank of the Tweed near Drumelzier, and is impaled on a salmon-stake in the water. Thus he dies by the three deaths that he has prophesied. The laugh at seeing the apple-leaf and the prophecy of the three different deaths are stories introduced into the poem; but in the poem it is not his own death that Merlin prophesies."

The prose narrative begins: "Eo quidem in tempore quo beatus kentegernus heremi deserta frequentare solebat. contigit die quadam illo in solitudinis arbusto solícite orante. vt quidam demens nudus et hirsutus et ab omni bono destitutus. quasi quidam toruum furiale transitum faceret secus eum qui lailoken vocabatur. quem quidam dicunt fuisse Merlynium." f. 74. It ends: "Porro opidum istud distat a Ciuitate Glascu quasi xxx<sup>ta</sup> miliaribus. In cuius campo lailoken tumulatus quiescit.

"Sude perrossus. lapidem perpressus. et vndam?"

Merlinus triplicem fertur inisse necem." f. 75b.

The Acta Sanctorum for January tells us with regard to St. Kentigern: "De eius aetate id solum possumus statuere, vixisse seculo a Cristi nativitate sexto, circiter annum 560, nam tum S. Columba floruit, quem illius fuisse aequalem constat."—vol. i. p. 815.

V.—Yscolan<sup>1</sup> is the shortest of the eight poems sometimes attributed to Myrddin, and is rejected as spurious both by Mr. Skene and M. de la Borderie, though the latter believes it to be a poem of the seventh century. But whatever its age it tells us nothing at all about Myrddin.

VI.—Prediction of Myrddin in his tomb.<sup>2</sup>

This is unquestionably as late as the end of the thirteenth century, and cannot be by Myrddin. In any case nothing important is to be learned from a poem which tells us merely—

“I have quaffed wine from a bright glass with the lords of fierce war ;

My name is Myrd[d]in, son of Morvryn.”

There remain a few fragments which call for a word of comment. In the Book of Taliessin (Four Anc. Books, i. 436) we find by an unknown writer a single allusion<sup>3</sup> to Myrddin in the poem entitled The Omen of Prydein the Great, “Myrd[d]in fortells these will meet, in Aber Peryddon, the stewards of the kings,” ll. 17, 18.

The poem on the Birch-trees contains nothing at all on Myrddin. It neither mentions his name nor alludes to him in any way. Skene regards it as “one of the spurious poems attributed to Myrddin which were composed in the twelfth century.<sup>1</sup> Last of all we have the poem called by de la Borderie Les Fouissements, which, besides being late, adds nothing to our knowledge of Myrddin.

We have now examined all of the extant Welsh literature that gives any hint as to the personality of Myrddin. We have found the record scanty at the best, and of not too convincing authenticity. Important is the fact that the supernatural element is not introduced, though it may be implied in the gift of prophecy. We here see Myrddin merely as a warrior-bard, who laments in moving words the death of his friends in battle. Our next step will take us to the Latin Vita Merlini, which we must compare with the Welsh poems. We shall discover a few points of likeness, but we must guard against overestimating the correspondences. Where the resemblance is not purely accidental there is scarcely enough to argue actual borrowing.

In the Vita Merlini<sup>2</sup> we find in the main a conception of Merlin very different from that in Geoffrey's Historia. This difference appears clearly in an analysis of the poem. If <sup>2</sup> Ward (Catal. of Romances, i. p. 286) gives a very good summary of the contents, but he does not bring out the fact that the mad bard identifies himself (ll. 681-683) with the prophet who explained to Vortigern the combat of the two dragons. "The main action of this poem begins after the battle of Ardderyd [Arduddyd]; which seems to have been fought in A.D. 573, between the great chief of the Pagans in Scotland, Gwenddolen,<sup>a</sup> on one side, and Maelgwn Gwynedd, R[h]ydderch Hael, and Aedan son of Gafran, on the other. Gwenddolen<sup>a</sup> was killed; R[h]ydderch established himself as King of Strathclyde, and recalled St. Kentigern from Wales to become Bishop of Glasgow; and Aedan was inaugurated King of Dalriada (Argyle and the Isles) by St. Columba. The battlefield was near two small hills, still called the Knows of Arthuret, on the western bank of the Esk, about nine miles north of Carlisle."

Cf. The Four Ancient Books of Wales, by W. F. Skene. Edinburgh, 1868. Vol. i. pp. 65-67. "Merlin is here described as a King of the South Welsh. Guennolous, King of Scotland, is defeated by Peredurus, the leader of the North Welsh, in conjunction with Merlin and Rodar, King of the Cambrians. Merlin, though his side wins the day, goes mad at the sight of the slaughter, and flies into the woods. He is enticed home by his wife Guenddoloena, and by his sister Ganiada, we take the facts in the life of Merlin in the order in which they are presented in the Vita Merlini we find that he was—

1. A king and prophet. l. 21.

2. That he

“Demetarumque superbis,

Iura dabat populis, ducibusque futura canebat.” ll. 21, 22.

3. That in a strife between several princes,

“Venerat ad bellum Merlinus cum Pereduro. ll. 31, 32.

4. That at the sight of the slaughter, who is married to Rodarcus. Several wild incidents follow, but finally Ganiada builds a great house in the woods for Merlin. Telgesinus (Taliessin) visits him; and they discourse together of the wonders of nature, and recall the day when they conveyed King Arthur in a boat steered by Barinthus (or Barrindeus, abbot of Druimcuillin, and a friend of St. Brandan's) to ‘Insula Pomorum’ (Avalon), where the king's wounds were tended by Morgain and her sisters.”

“Hoc viso, Merline, doles, tristesque per agmen. l. 38.

The Caledonian Forest, to which Merlin fled, is thus described by J. Rhys (Celtic Britain, p. 225): “The Caledonian Forest is found to have been located by Ptolemy where there is every reason to suppose it really was, namely, covering a tract where we are told that a thick wood of birch and hazel must once have stretched from the west of the district of Menteith, in the neighbourhood of Loch Lomond, across the country to Dunkeld. It is this vast forest that probably formed, in part at least, the boundary between the Caledonians and the Verturiones or the Brythons of Fortrenn.”

Skene (Four Anc. Books of Wales, i. 54) remarks: “The seventh battle [of Arthur] was ‘in silva Caledonis, id est, Cat Coit Celidon’—that is, the battle was so called, for Cat means a battle, and Coed Celyddon the Wood of Celyddon. This is the Nemus Caledonis that Merlin is said, in the Latin Vita Merlini, to have fled to after the battle of Ardderyth, and where, according to the tradition reported by Fordun (B. iii. ch. xxvi.), he met Kentigern, and afterwards was slain by the shepherds of Meldredus, a regulus of the country on the banks of the Tweed, ‘prope oppidum Dunmeller.’ Local tradition places the scene of it in Tweeddale, where, in the parish of Drumelzier, anciently Dunmeller, in which the name of Meldredus is preserved, is shewn the grave of Merlin. The upper part of the valley of the Tweed was once a great forest, of which the forests of Selkirk and Ettrick formed a part, and seems to have been known by the name of the Coed Celyddon.”

See also Skene's Celtic Scotland, i. p. 86.

5. That Peredur and his companions vainly endeavour to quiet Merlin :

“Solatur Peredurus eum, proceresque ducesque. l. 68.
Nec vult solari nec verba precantia ferre.”

6. That after three days of weeping and fasting Merlin flees to the forests, and becomes a wild man of the woods, forgetful of himself and of his friends :

“Iam tribus emensis defleerat ille diebus. l. 70.

Respueratque cibos ; tantus dolor usserat illum :

Inde novas furias, cum tot tantisque querelis

Aera compleret, cepit, furtimque recidit ;

Et fugit ad silvas, nec vult fugiendo videri,

Ingrediturque nemus, gaudetque latere sub ornis ;

Miraturque feras pascentes gramina saltus.

Nunc has insequitur, nunc cursu præterit illas.

Utitur herbarum radicibus ; utitur herbis ;

Utitur arboreo fructo, morisque rubeti.

Fit silvester homo, quasi silvis editus esset. l. 80.

Inde per aestatem totam ; nullique repertus,

Oblitusque sui, cognatorumque suorum,

Delituit, silvis obductus more ferino.

At cum venit [h]yems herbasque tulisset et omnes

Arboreos fructus, nec quo frueretur haberet ;

Diffudit tales miseranda voce querelas.”

7. That his complaints are heard by a passer-by who comes from the court of Rodarchus :

“Ecce viatori venit obuius alter ab aula. l. 121.

Rodarchi regis Cumborum, qui Ganiadam

Duxerat uxorem, formosa coniuge felix.

Merlini soror ista fuit, casumque dolebat

Fratris, et ad silvas et ad arva remota clientes

Miserat, ut fratrem revocarent.”

One said he had seen Merlin

“Inter dumosos saltus nemoris Calidonis.”

8. That Merlin is persuaded to return to his wife and sister :
 " Et veniunt pariter laetantes regis in urbem. l. 214.
 Ergo fratre suo gaudet regina recepto,
 Proque sui reditu fit coniunx laeta mariti."
9. But that he shortly goes mad again :
 " At postquam tantas hominum Merlinus adesse. l. 221.
 Inspexit turmas, nec eas perferre valeret ;
 Cepit enim furias, iterumque furore repletus
 Ad nemus ire cupit, furtimque recedere quaerit."
10. That after a time he flees again to the woods :
 " Et petiit silvas nullo prohibente cupitas." l. 385.
 Some time later he is again brought to Court.
11. That one day he utters various prophecies, and adds :
 " Haec Vortigerno cecini prolixus olim. l. 681.
 Exponendo duum sibi mistica bella draconum
 In ripa stagni quando consedimus hausti."
12. That he then asks his sister to send for Telgesinus to come to him ; and the two wise men discourse a long time together on problems of nature :
 " Quid ventus nimbusve foret," etc. l. 734.

At l. 982, Merlin begins with the betrayal of Conistans, and recounts the history of Uter and Ambrosius, Vortimer and Arthur, and the treason of Modred. The story of Ygerne is passed over in silence. This résumé of the Historia extends to l. 1135.

In what follows (ll. 1136-1529) we are told of the discovery of a spring, by the drinking of the water of which Merlin's reason was restored. Then follows a considerable discourse with Telegesinus, and some prophecies.

The origin of a considerable part of the Vita Merlini is not very difficult to trace. As Gaston Paris remarks : " The author mingles notices of geography and natural history borrowed from classical writers with popular British tales, the greater portion of which are found elsewhere.”<sup>1</sup> Exactly how much of the material is Celtic is uncertain. There is a certain vague correspondence between parts of the Vita and parts of the Aval-lenau and the (spurious) Hoianau. Merlin has long conversations in the Vita with Telgesinus; and Myrddin engages in conversation with Taliessin in a short Welsh dialogue, probably ancient. These correspondences may not be accidental, but they are not so definite as to argue actual borrowing, to say nothing of actual translation.<sup>2</sup> Of course, Geoffrey uses names that appear in Welsh literature, as for instance, in the following passage; but these had doubtless become common literary property in his day:—

1. 26. “Dux Venedotorum Peredurus bella gerabat Contra Guennoloum Scotiae qui regna regebat.”

Aneurin<sup>1</sup> (stanza 31), as “Peredur with steel arms,” and he appears also in the Mabinogion as the hero of one of the tales.

It would be very difficult to prove that Geoffrey made extended use of any Welsh literature now extant. The following passages from the Hoianau, the Avallenau, and the Vita contain all the parallels I have been able to discover.

The Britons their noble kingdom
Shall for a long time lose through weakness,
Until from Armorica Conan shall come in his car,
And Cadwaladr, the honoured leader of the Cymry.

And the prophecy can only have assumed this shape after the fictitious narrative of Cadwaladr taking refuge in Armorica was substituted for his death in the pestilence, and the scene of his return is placed in South Wales, whence this form of prophecy emerged.” Mr. Phillimore suggests that Cadwaladr is preferably Cadwaladr.

I.

Sweet apple-tree of delightful branches,	Tres quater et iuges septenae poma ferentes
Budding luxuriantly, and shoot- ing forth renowned scions.	Hic steterant mali; nunc non stant. <sup>2</sup> —ll. 90, 91.

I will predict before the owner of Machreu,
That in the valley of Machawy<sup>3</sup> on Wednesday there will be blood,—

Joy to Lloegyr of the blood-red blades.
Hear, O little pig! there will come on Thursday
Joy to the Cymry of mighty battles,
In their defence of Cymminawd, with their incessant swordthrusts.

On the Saxons there will be a slaughter with ashen spears,
And their heads will be used as balls to play with.

I prophesy truth without disguise,—
The elevation of a child in a secluded part of the South.

II.

Sweet apple-tree, a green tree of luxurious growth,
How large are its branches, and beautiful its form!
And I will predict a battle that will make me shriek
At Pengwern, in the sovereign feast, mead is appropriate.

III.

Sweet apple-tree, and yellow tree,
Grow at Tal Ardd, without a garden surrounding it;

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Phillimore states: "The vale of the Machawy (now spelt 'Bachowey') is in S. Radnorshire. A great battle was fought there near Pain's Castle, toward the end of the twelfth century, and three thousand men were killed. See Giraldus Cambrensis' works for this slaughter."

And I will predict a battle in Prydyn,
In defence of their frontier against the men of Dublin ;
Seven ships will come over the wide lake,
And seven hundred over the sea to conquer.
Of those that come, none will go to Cennyn,
Except seven half-empty ones, according to the prediction.

IV.

Sweet apple-tree that luxuriantly grows !
Food I used to take at its base to please a fair maid,
When, with my shield on my shoulder, and my sword on my thigh,
I slept all alone in the wood of Celyddon.
Hear, O little pig ; now apply thyself to reason,
And listen to birds whose notes are pleasant :
Sovereigns across the sea will come on Monday ;
Blessed will the Cymry be, from that design.

V.

Sweet apple-tree that grows in the glade !
Their vehemence will conceal it from the lords of R[h]ydderch ;
Trodden it is around its base, and men are about it.
Terrible to them were heroic forms :
Gwenddyd[d] loves me not, greets me not ;
I am hated by the firmest minister of R[h]ydderch ;
I have ruined his son and his daughter.
Death takes all away, why does he not visit me ?
For after Gwenddoleu no princes honour me ;
I am not soothed with diversion, I am not visited by the fair ;
Yet in the battle of Ardderyd [Arderydd] golden was my torques,
Though I am now despised by her who is of the colour of swans.

VI.

Sweet apple-tree of delicate bloom,
That grows in concealment in the woods !

At break of day the tale was told me,
 That the firmest minister is offended at my creed,
 Twice, thrice, four times, in one day.
 O Jesus! would that my end had come
 Before the death of the son of Gwend[d]ydd happen on my hand!

VII.

Sweet apple-tree, which grows by the river side!
 With respect to it, the keeper will not thrive on its splendid fruit.
 While my reason was not aberrant, I used to be around its stem
 With a fair sportive maid, a paragon of slender form.

With very trifling exceptions this is the entire extent of Geoffrey's indebtedness in the Vita to such of the Welsh literature as has come down to us. At best it would be difficult to prove from the correspondences between these Welsh poems and the Vita that Geoffrey had ever seen them.<sup>1</sup> Surely we may admit that some of the Welsh poems refer to the battle of Arderydd, and that the Vita Merlini does the same, without being compelled to assume that the Vita is based upon them. From a variety of considerations we may conclude that a considerable part of the Vita is in the last analysis Celtic, but further than this we can hardly go. The Welsh poems that we have may be mere fragmentary representatives of a large body of Welsh literature now irretrievably lost, but perhaps still in existence in the time of Geoffrey. It is possible, if not certain, that Geoffrey had access to a considerable mass of floating unwritten tradition based, it may be, in part on old poems that have long since perished. Probably none of these poems were directly employed in the composition of the Vita Merlini; but a set of parallel traditions, based in part on the same events referred to in the Welsh poems, may have formed the groundwork of those portions of the Latin poem which tell of Merlin's madness and of his discourse with Taliessin.

VI.

THE TRANSITION TO FRENCH LITERATURE.

HAVING now taken a general survey of the Latin and Celtic sources that are extant, and that can therefore be directly examined, we are prepared to see how the legend passed into the literature of France, and thence into the other literatures of Western Europe. But before entering upon this question we ought to glance at what M. Gaston Paris calls the matière de Bretagne.<sup>1</sup> Unfortunately we cannot trace the growth of the legend in Armorica. The Breton literature, considerable of which doubtless existed at an early period, has not been preserved except in the form of early French<sup>2</sup> and Icelandic translations, and none of these relate in any way to Merlin. The existence of a large body of unwritten tradition, which kept a precarious existence on the lips of jongleurs and harpers,<sup>3</sup> is not open to question. But to what extent the popular imagination modified the original material can, in the absence of literary documents, be only a field for conjecture. But while we are unable to trace directly the Armorican literature in its various forms, we have from a variety of sources evidence of the existence of Breton lais, in which perhaps the germ of many of the later French romances is to be sought. Without question there existed both in greater and lesser Britain before Geoffrey of Monmouth wrote his Historia, and perhaps before Nennius composed his little chronicle, a considerable body of songs embodying popular legends.<sup>4</sup> Some of these recitals undoubtedly found their way into Geoffrey's Historia. It is probable, too, that the publication of his book and of the numerous translations brought to light a great number of songs or lais, as well as prose legends which had been known only in obscure corners or had at most been sung and related by wandering harpers in passing from castle to

castle. As soon as the Historia crystallized some of this material into literary form, the example once set was followed by a great variety of versifiers and prose-writers, whose activity extended through several generations. A part, at least, of these songs may have related to Arthur and the Round Table as well as to his Court, and they would naturally penetrate into the courtly circles which alone could substantially reward the singer. The stories embodied in these songs must have passed from lip to lip in the form of prose tales, and, once introduced into the quick-witted French and Norman society, the progress of assimilation must have been rapid.<sup>1</sup>

Wace cités plus haut nous ont montré à l'œuvre les conteurs et les 'fableurs' brochant à qui mieux sur le fond des aventures de la Table ronde."—Hist. Litt. de la France, xxx. pp. 7-9.

The case against the theory proposed by M. Gaston Paris is stated<sup>a</sup> "by Prof. Foerster in the introduction to his recently published edition of Chrétien's Erec, and at greater length by Prof. Zimmer.<sup>b</sup> Without going into details, let it suffice to say, that, on the negative side, the latter challenges the production of any evidence to show, that Welsh bards or minstrels used to sing to the Saxons in England before the Norman Conquest, or even after that event to either Normans or Saxons at a time early enough for the purpose of M. Paris' argument. He contends that the term 'lais bretons' and 'la matière de Bretagne' had nothing to do with Wales, but everything with the Bretons and Brittany. Then as to the lays and the romances, and the suggestion that the latter are derived from the former, he denies it, partly because neither he nor Foerster knows of any lays which can be said to have been originally Arthurian; partly also—and this brings us to the positive side of Zimmer's contention—because he is convinced that the romances were based on stories in prose rather than in verse. He even goes so far as to call attention to what he considers an ancient and far-reaching distinction between Celts and Teutons, namely, that while the Teutonic way of dealing with the heroic was to express it in the form of an epic poem, the Celtic ideal was that of an epic story in prose. To suit the Norman the Celtic originals had not only to be translated into his language, but also transformed into the epic form of his predilection. The versification was his own business, or that of his French neighbours; but the translation was quite a different matter, belonging to an antecedent stage, and this is believed by Zimmer to have been gradually done, in the first instance, by the Bretons of the eastern portion of Brittany when they gave up their own Brythonic speech to adopt Norman French in its stead, and when their nobles became dependent on Normandy.

Accordingly Dr. Zimmer lays great emphasis on the difference between the Arthur of the romances, whom he tries to trace to Breton sources, and the Welsh Arthur whom Nennius, for instance, mentions hunting the Porcus Troit. This, however, does not go quite far enough, as the rôle he assigns to the Normanized Bretons of east Brittany does not exclude the Welsh from playing a similar rôle with regard to the Normans later, namely, after the advent of the latter into Wales: witness the case of the Welshman Bledri. The twofold Brythonic origin of the romances makes itself perceptible in a way which the readers of these chapters may have already noticed, especially in the matter of proper names. Looked at from our point of view, the latter divide themselves into two groups:—1. Well-known names like Gauvain and Modred, the forms of which do not admit of being explained as the result of misreading or miscopying of Welsh originals: they may be the French forms which the Normanizing Bretons gave them—without the direct intervention of scribes or literary men of any kind—when they adopted French as their language.

what a hold this material had already got upon the writers of romance :—

“Ne sont que trois matieres a nul home entendant
De France, de Bretagne, et de Rome la grant ;
Et de ces trois matieres ni a nul semblant

At the outset this material, in the opinion of Gaston Paris, came from England, and thence was carried into France, either directly by the British singers and story-tellers, or by means of Anglo-Norman story-tellers ; or already put into verse in the lays and the Anglo-Norman poems.”<sup>2</sup> But the part played by Armorican Britain must not be overlooked. A more or less lively intercourse was kept up between Armorica<sup>3</sup> and Great Britain, and it is quite probable that the Arthurian and Merlin legends were almost as well known in Armorica as

2. Names like Gonomans, Bron, and Palomydes, together with place-names like Aroie, which readily admit of being explained from Welsh originals : these mostly belong to the romances more or less closely connected with the story of the Holy Grail, which itself we have endeavoured to trace to Welsh sources. This opens up a new and difficult question, which may be confidently left to future research.”

For the sake of comparison I add the following passage from Kreyssig's Gesch. der franz. Lit. i. pp. 78, 79 : — “Einen ganz andern Character als die chansons de geste tragen die nunmehr zu betrachtenden romans. In ihnen haben wir das Resultat der Berührung der französischen Normannen und der englischen Kelten zu sehen ; von diesen haben sie die Vorliebe für das Wunderbare, Übersinnliche, Geheimnisvolle, Mystische, den Glauben an Riesen, Zwerge, Feen, Zauberer, Drachen ; von jenen den chevaleresken Zug, die keine Gefahr scheuende Tapferkeit, die Betonung des Motivs der Liebe, der in den Heldengedichten nur spärlich Raum gelassen ist. In ihnen ist der ritterliche Geist zur vollsten Entwicklung gelangt, und es ist wohl angezeigt sein Wesen in kurzen Zügen darzustellen, da die Kenntniss desselben zum Verständniss der sein Gepräge tragenden Litteraturproducte unumgänglich notwendig ist.”

in the heart of Wales itself. At any rate, it is hardly open to question that these British chants and tales are older<sup>1</sup> than any of the French romances in prose or verse<sup>2</sup>; and we may suppose that, while the French romances were growing up on all sides, these British tales were diffused in France and England "under the double form of the lai and the story," from the "first half of the twelfth century till toward the middle of the thirteenth."<sup>3</sup>

Wace recognized the existence of this material in speaking of the Round Table, which Geoffrey of Monmouth had not mentioned, and significantly adds that of this the Britons tell many a fable. He had doubtless an independent acquaintance with Breton legends; for he mentions in the Roman de Rou the wonderful fountain of Broceliande, and says that he has visited the spot without discovering any marvels.

We may, then, grant at once that Geoffrey of Monmouth was not the originator of the material of the French romances,<sup>4</sup> but we may suppose that his work gave the necessary impetus for the literary development of the legends he had told. His popularity is evidenced by several translations<sup>5</sup> of his Historia into French verse. The first by Geoffrey Gaimar (1145) has disappeared without leaving an enduring trace. But in 1155, about a decade after Geoffrey of Monmouth had given the final touches to his Historia, Wace<sup>6</sup> translated the whole into octosyllabic rhyming verse, and opened to those writers who had but a slender acquaintance with Latin an orderly grouping of materials that were capable of indefinite expansion.

In so far as Merlin is concerned, Wace is little more than a translator of Geoffrey. The diffuseness of the translator in his versified descriptions of feasts and battles entitles him to no great credit for inventiveness; and his only real addition<sup>1</sup> is his account of the establishment of the Round Table.<sup>2</sup> This, however, belongs more to the history of Arthur than to that of Merlin.

Wace's Roman de Brut was put into French prose shortly after its appearance,<sup>3</sup> and then recopied, imitated, and translated so frequently that the versions in English as well as in French have not yet been properly edited. Up to the last quarter of the twelfth century no French writer seems to have ventured to make independent use of the materials for romance that lay scattered in such profusion. But after Wace's Brut had made this material familiar to French writers the period of production began. Our limits make it impossible for us to do more than to follow closely the origin of the prose romance of Merlin.

For the purposes of our examination we may note that the prose Merlin divides itself into two very unequal parts. The first part comprises about one-seventh of the whole, and represents what was in all probability the original romance of Merlin.<sup>4</sup> The second part deals more particularly with King Anglo-Norman verse by Geoffrey Gaimar (1154), and then by Wace (1180), whose work, Li Romans de Brut, contained a good deal of new matter." The few facts that we have of the life of Wace are found for the most part in the autobiographic hints that he gives in the Roman de Rou, ll. 5315-5329; 10440-10453; 16526-16537.

Arthur. The first part ends with the coronation of Arthur. This event the romancers took as a point of departure for a number of versions widely differing in character. Our English translation is based on the continuation most in vogue. For convenience, therefore, we may first deal with the original romance, and then make a more detailed survey of the continuations. We can then best treat the question of the authorship of the latter portion of the romance.

The original French romance of Merlin was in verse, and was probably written as early as the last decade of the twelfth century, if not earlier. The Merlin, as already noted, was intended to serve as a connecting link<sup>1</sup> between two other poems, Joseph d'Arimathie and Perceval. Of these poems we have the first entire<sup>2</sup>; of the second, we have a fragment of 504 lines; of the third,<sup>3</sup> we have nothing in verse, but we possess a fourteenth-century prose version much altered, in a unique manuscript of the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris.<sup>4</sup> The poem of Merlin was early reduced to prose,<sup>5</sup> and then furnished the incidents of the short romance of Merlin. M. Gaston Paris,<sup>6</sup> following Birch-Hirschfeld, thinks that the prose Perceval published by Hucher<sup>7</sup> is based upon a poem by Robert de Borron. The conclusion is reasonably certain, though we know nothing of the prose-writer.

The few known facts of Robert's life have been brought together in an attempted chronological sequence ;<sup>1</sup> but of his personal history, the date of his birth, the circumstances in which he wrote, his relations to the other writers of his time, the extent of his education, and the opportunities he had for becoming acquainted with the legends which he reproduced in verse—of all this we can say very little that is certain.<sup>2</sup> He mentions in his poem (ll. 3488–3494)—

“ Mon seigneur Gautier in peis, Qui de Mont Belyal estoit,”

and tells us that from Gautier he had learned the story of the Graal. The meaning of these lines has been variously interpreted ; but the most probable explanation is that which takes the words en peis and estoit to refer to the decease of Gautier (Walter) in 1212. This was thirteen years after he had left France for Italy and the Holy Land, where he had been made Constable of Jerusalem. Robert de Borron had been in Walter's service sometime between 1170 (?) and 1190, and perhaps during the entire period. In these years<sup>3</sup> he wrote the first draft of his poem ; and the second draft, in all probability, after Walter's death in 1212. This second draft is the one that we possess.

Now follows an obscure period in which the exact sequence of events cannot be traced. But in any case, though we cannot fix the precise year in which each production took shape, we may believe that in the course of two generations or less after Robert de Borron began to write, the most important of the prose romances were, if not already written, at least in their main outlines, already conceived.<sup>1</sup> None of these romances can be said to have been finished at any particular time; for in most cases each new copyist felt at liberty to substitute something of his own for whatever was not exactly to his liking.

<sup>3</sup> Nutt, Studies, pp. 6, 7. Ten Brink, Gesch. der engl. Lit. i. p. 215, supposes Robert to have written in the sixties of the twelfth century. As a curiosity of literary history, we may note that San-Marte regarded Robert de Borron as a thirteenth-century adapter of earlier prose versions of the Saint-Graal. Cf. Nutt, Studies, p. 99.

As already remarked, the prose romance of Merlin is a more or less faithful reproduction of the poem of Robert de Borron. As a specimen, I have placed the beginning and the end of the Merlin fragment side by side with the French prose and the English prose.

A comparison of the three parallel texts shows how closely and yet with what considerable variations the prose adapter has handled his original. It is, however, by no means certain that we have the earliest French prose version of the poem, and we can therefore make allowances for a second paraphrase based, it may be, upon the first one. As for the English version, it is based upon a French text differing slightly from those texts that have come down to us.

THE FRENCH MANUSCRIPTS OF THE PROSE MERLIN.

IN the following list I have arranged in chronological order all of the manuscripts of the French prose Merlin<sup>1</sup> that are mentioned in the numerous catalogues I have consulted. After grouping the manuscripts according to age, I have endeavoured to point out in detail some of the relations existing among the more important ones. The generic grouping is always a perilous task; and I shall not insist too strongly upon the family resemblances that I find. I need hardly add that I make no pretence to an absolutely exact chronological arrangement, though in the main it will be found, I think, that the older manuscript has the earlier place. Until we have established such a chronology, and know how many hands retouched the original work, we can, of course, scarcely hope to understand precisely the relations of one version to another. We should, however, not forget that a late manuscript may represent a very early copy now lost, and thus give a more primitive version (though in modernized phraseology) than a manuscript actually older. The original version seems to have been lost,<sup>1</sup> and it can be tentatively reconstructed only by laborious critical comparison. There now exist the following French manuscripts of the prose Romance of Merlin. Some of these represent only the first part (ch. i.-vi.), some only the second part (ch. vii.-xxxiii.), and some are mere fragments.<sup>2</sup>

- 1.* Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 337, Anc. No. 6958, xiii. cent. Incomplete at the beginning and the end. Contains only the Book of Arthur, and after f. 115, col. 1, l. 28, presents a unique version, differing entirely from all the other texts.<sup>3</sup>
- 2.* Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 747, Anc. No. 7170, xiii. cent. Contains prose romance of Joseph, or the Saint-Graal, and the Merlin, complete.<sup>4</sup>
3. Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 748, Anc. No. 7170, Fonds de Cangé, No. 4, middle of xiii. cent. Contains Roman de Joseph ou du Saint-Graal,<sup>5</sup> and the first part of the Romance of Merlin. Incomplete at the end. Parallels the English version with some variations up to the words, "On witson even be comen coun-[seile of all the barons]," p. 106, l. 31. For our purpose this

<sup>3</sup> Cf. G. Paris, Introd. to Merlin, i. p. xxiv. note. An edition of this MS. is to be published by the Société des Anciens Textes. This version is interesting, too, in that it mentions "maistre Gautiers mape" (f. 152, col. 2), and tells us that he had translated the book from Latin into French at the request of King Henry, who richly rewarded him. Credat Judæus!

<sup>5</sup> P. Paris, MSS. Franç. vi. p. 2, observes that this is a "Volume fort précieux en ce qu'il contient le même récit en prose que M. Francisque Michel a publié en vers d'après le Manuscrit de Saint-Germain, No. 1987. Le texte en prose paraît unique comme le texte en vers. Le roman de Merlin commence au f. 18 r. Il diffère peu des leçons ordinaires, et n'est continué que jusqu'au couronnement d'Artus."

manuscript is of no especial importance, as it belongs to the group of manuscripts which differ so widely (f. 28*b*, col. 2) from the English version at one point (p. 23).

4. Paris, Bib. de l'Arsenal, MS. fr. 2996, Anc. No. 225 B.F., xiii. cent. Contains Le Petit Saint-Graal ou Joseph d'Arimathie and the first branch of Merlin. Very badly defaced at the end. Last page almost illegible. The legible portion parallels the English version up to p. 105. This manuscript presents the ordinary readings of the MSS., and varies (f. 25*b*–f. 26, col. 1), as do so many of the other MSS., from the English version at p. 23. It may be classed with Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 748 (No. 3 of our list).<sup>1</sup>
5. Paris, Bib. de l'Arsenal, MS. fr. 2997, Anc. No. 229 B.F., xiii. cent. Contains the first branch of the Romance of Merlin, followed by the Petit Saint-Graal.<sup>2</sup> This manuscript calls for no special remark. Some pages are hardly legible, but the readings in general are not peculiar. The French parallels the English up to the end of Chapter vi. p. 107, but like Bib. Nat. MS. 748 it differs (f. 8) from the English version at p. 23 (cf. No. 3 of our list). At the end of the Saint-Graal Merlin is called Mellin.
- 6.* Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 344, Anc. No. 6965, middle of xiii. cent.<sup>3</sup> Contains Saint-Graal, Merlin, Lancelot, La Quête du Saint-Graal.<sup>4</sup> As far as f. 182, col. 2, l. 36, the French parallels the English version (p. 521, l. 31); then rapidly condenses the remainder of the story, and ends with f. 184, col. 1, l. 26. The first column on the page is filled up with a miniature, and two lines of the Lancelot. The second column begins with a miniature and the two opening lines, which are repeated from the first column.
7. Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 2455, xiii. cent. Contains Saint-Graal (ff. 1–338) and a very short fragment of the beginning of the prose Merlin, nine long lines and four and a half short ones.
- 8.* Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 770, Anc. No. 7185,<sup>3,3</sup> Fonds de Cangé, No. 6, middle of xiii. century. Contains Saint-Graal, Merlin

- 12.* Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 749, Anc. No. 7171, Fontainebleau No. 733, etc. End of xiii. cent. Contains Roman de Joseph ou du Saint-Graal, Merlin complete. Paulin Paris remarks<sup>6</sup> that this text is good, and contains several episodes of the Merlin not found in all the old manuscripts. The last nine laisses of the Merlin, are lost.
13. Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 423, Anc. No. 7024, Anc. Bib. Mazarin No. 116, Morceau No. 14. End of xiii. cent. Paulin Paris calls this a "curious abridgement of the romances of the Saint-Graal and of Merlin. The last leaves are wanting."<sup>7</sup> There is no formal division between the Petit Saint-Graal and the Merlin, except that a new paragraph is begun. The French parallels the English up to the middle of p. 23, but at this point differs by giving the version which says that "when the two books are put together they will be i. bel liure."
- 14.* Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 19,162, S.G. fr. 1245, xiii.-xiv. cent. Contains Saint-Graal and Merlin complete.

- 18.* Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 105, Anc. No. 6777. End of xiii. or beginning of xiv. cent.<sup>3</sup> Contains Joseph d'Arimathie and Merlin complete.
- 19.* Paris, Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 9123, suppl. fr. 11. xiv. cent. Contains Joseph d'Arimathie and Merlin. This manuscript, though later and somewhat better preserved, is almost exactly like MS. fr. 105 in its readings. The two MSS. agree in having rubrics as headings for the chapters, a feature not found in many of the MSS. of Merlin. These two MSS. seem on the whole to represent more nearly than any of the others the French original of the English romances. The details of the proof will be found in the subsequent discussion.

same adventures, only with two additional chapters, viz. that of the dwarf knight and that of the birth of Lancelot.<sup>1</sup> Besides being too late to have been used as the basis of our translation, this manuscript is a copy of a version which omits numerous passages contained in the English translation as well as in several of the French MS. Such omissions may be verified by comparing E. p. 176 with Fr. f. 83, col. 1; E. p. 179 with f. 83*b*, col. 1; E. p. 187, l. 8–l. 18 with f. 85*b*, col. 2; E. p. 189 with f. 86, col. 1, etc. The test passage, f. 21*b*, col. 2 and f. 22, col. 1, differs from the English, p. 23, in giving the expanded version and in omitting to mention “Maister Martins.”<sup>2</sup>

THE MERLIN A COMPOSITE ROMANCE.

At this point, before venturing on a further classification, we can most conveniently consider the facts which indicate that the Romance of Merlin as we have it is a composite of several romances.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. P. Paris, MSS. Franç. ii. 340. To the MSS. noticed above I may add three MSS. mentioned in the Romania for 1873, vol. ii. pp. 51, 53, 55 as existing in the Este collection (in Italy) of the fifteenth century.

(1) “6(20). Libro uno in francexe, chiamato Merlino,—in carta membrana, coerto de chore roso.”

(2) “43 Libro uno chiamato Merlino—in membrana, coerto de chore roso—in francexe.”

(3) “Liber Merlini—in membranis.”

In the year 1868, about a third of a century after the publication of his first work on the Arthurian romances, Paulin Paris expressed the opinion<sup>1</sup> that the romance of Merlin was made up of at least two principal parts by different writers, the first part<sup>2</sup> extending to the coronation of Arthur; the second, comprising the remainder of the romance. At first sight the division appears somewhat arbitrary, but closer study makes it extremely probable.<sup>3</sup> At any rate, the scepticism with which I was disposed at the outset to regard the theory has almost entirely vanished. As the details of his argument are but little known to English readers, I will venture to reproduce concisely what is to be urged in favour of his view. Paulin Paris presented his arguments in several different forms at different times, but they may be reduced to the following:—

1.—At the close of the original romance of Merlin<sup>4</sup> we are told that Arthur after his coronation held the land and the kingdom for a long time in peace. But in the romance as we have it the rebellion against Arthur follows immediately after. It is hardly probable that a writer would so contradict himself in the course of a few lines.

2.—At the end of the poem of Joseph d'Arimathie Robert de Borron had promised to take up the adventures of Alain le Gros when he had read the large book of the Graal where they are related. Now, in one of the manuscripts of Merlin,<sup>5</sup> after telling of the coronation of Arthur, the author says he is going to tell of Alain, and when done with him to return to Arthur. This promise is not kept in any version which has come down to us; and these closing lines are omitted in all the other manuscripts. They are evidently the prose equivalents of the concluding verses of the poem of Merlin. All the versions pass at once to the rebellion of the barons who disdained the young king.

From these and other data Paulin Paris concludes: 1. That Robert de Borron had nothing to do with the Book of the Saint-Graal, written at the very same time when he composed Joseph d'Arimathie; 2. that after becoming acquainted with the Graal he intended to continue the history of Alain le Gros, if not of Bron and Petrus; 3. that the writers who came after Robert de Borron, finding the story of Alain fully told in the Graal, set aside Robert's poetic version (assuming that it really existed) and substituted for it the history of Arthur,<sup>1</sup> which they harmonized as well as they could with the Merlin.

M. Paris finds additional confirmation for his theory in the numerous contradictions between the first portion of the romance and the second:—

1.—In the original romance the Duke of Tintagel<sup>2</sup> left several daughters, the eldest of whom married Loth, King of Orkanie, while another daughter, the illegitimate Morgain, was put to school. In the continuation we find that Ygerne had been twice married before espousing Uter-Pendragon. Of this double marriage were born five daughters: the Queen of Orcanie, wife of Loth; the Queen of Garlot, wife of Nautre (Ventres)<sup>3</sup>; the Queen of Wales (Gorre), wife of Urien; the Queen of Scotland, widow of Briadan, and mother of King Aguisel (Aguysas); finally, the wise Morgain, surnamed le fee.

2.—In the short romance of Robert de Borron, Merlin had made a golden dragon as a standard just after the battle of

<sup>3</sup> I need not remark that the forms of the names are so various in the MSS. that no two writers on the Arthurian romances are quite agreed as to which forms to adopt.

Salisbury, won by the brothers Pendragon and Uter. In the continuation Merlin makes the dragon for Arthur (Eng. p. 115) instead of for his father. This argument is, however, not very convincing, as there is no reason why Merlin may not have made two dragons as well as one.

3.—According to Robert de Borron, Kay was made steward or seneschal at the time when Arthur took the sword out of the stone (Eng. p. 104). In the continuation, observes Paulin Paris, it is at the moment of attacking the six rebel kings that Arthur confides to Kay, his foster-brother, the office of seneschal (Eng. p. 116).

I must confess that as the two passages appear in the English I can see no real contradiction at this point. The English reads as follows:—

“And be counseile of the archebisshoþ and certein of the barouns, Kay was made stiwarde,” p. 104.

“Than toke the kynge the dragon and yaf it to Kay, his stiwarde, in soche forwarde that he be chef banerer of the reame of logres euer while his lif doth dure,” p. 116.

4.—Paulin Paris instances<sup>1</sup> also the confusion introduced by the Round Table of Leodegan, and observes that the continuator of Robert de Borron's narrative was content to follow the ancient lays without regard to the contradictions.

We may then, argues Paulin Paris, regard it as well established<sup>2</sup> that we have in the large romance of Merlin at least two romances. The first ends at the coronation of Arthur, and represents the original poem of Robert de Borron—a poem written to link the poem of Joseph d'Arimathie with the (lost) poem of Perceval. To this original romance were added several continuations, one of which became more popular than the others, and furnished the text for the early printed editions. In the following pages I will sketch briefly these different versions.

It is not impossible that other continuations of the romance existed that have not been preserved. Those that we have are found in the following manuscripts:—

1. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 337 (list No. 1).
2. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 344 (list No. 6).
3. Bib. Nat. Nouv. acq. fr. 4166 (list No. 16).
4. Huth MS., London (list No. 15).
5. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 98 (list No. 23).

The continuation known as the vulgate, or the Merlin ordinaire, appears in a considerable number of manuscripts which exhibit only minor variations. The reason for treating any of these versions separately is one of convenience only.

1. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 337.

On this manuscript Paulin Paris remarks that it is the one which before all others should be consulted by those who would well understand the history of the Enchanter Merlin.<sup>1</sup> The volume has lost the original beginning and the end, and begins, “with the court that King Arthur holds immediately after his coronation,” and “ends with the combat of Gawein with Oriol, king of the Saxons.” For a considerable distance this version runs parallel with the ordinary version, and in many cases agrees almost word for word with it. But this text (MS. 337), after describing the amour of Guyomar with Morgain le fee, breaks off abruptly (f. 115, col. 1, l. 28), and returns to speak of King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table. The ordinary French text<sup>2</sup> (represented by the English version p. 509) introduces at this point King Loth and his sons as starting out on their mission to the feudatory princes. The entire remainder of the narrative in MS. 337 and in the vulgate is essentially different, though here and there is a passage which points to a common source. In the unique portion (of MS. 337) which follows the point of divergence, the wars with the Saxons, and the personal adventures of Seigramor, of Yvain, of King Arthur, and especially of Gawein, are dwelt upon at great length, and with an infinity of detail. There are, however, four hundred pages (pp. 108-508) of the English version that contain essentially the same narrative as appears in the first 115 leaves of this manuscript. It is true that the minor variations are such as to preclude the possibility of this version having been actually used by the English translator; for there are numberless differences in forms of names, in numerals, in omitted sentences, and added phrases.<sup>1</sup> Yet multitudes of passages are almost literally coincident, and show clearly that all the versions, in so far as they agree at all, were copied with mere individual variations from one original. This manuscript is one of the very earliest of those that have been preserved to us, though it may in turn have been based upon a version still earlier.

If now we take up the later unique portion of the romance, and add it to the portion which agrees with the vulgate, we have a romance far exceeding in length any of the existing versions.<sup>2</sup> We cannot go into the details of this unique French version, but must be content to note a few of the more <sup>1</sup> Cf. for instance, the list of knights, f. 29, col. 2, with that of the English version, p. 212; the description of Gonnore, f. 33*b*, with that on p. 227 of the English version; f. 107*b*, col. 1, with English, p. 485. These are by no means the most divergent of the passages that might be cited.

<sup>2</sup> In the entire MS. are 294 leaves or 588 pages ( $14\frac{1}{2} \times 10\frac{3}{4}$  in.) of two columns each, which would be equal to about 1030 pages of our English translation. If we were to add the first branch of the Merlin, we should have, say, 1130 pages, and still have an unfinished romance! The unique portion is equal in amount to about 625 pages of the English translation: that is, it lacks only about 75 pages of being as long as the entire English version.

remarkable passages. In reading the ordinary Merlin and the Book of Arthur, the attentive reader remarks several passages in which the writer promises to explain something more fully later in the narrative. For instance, after describing the amour of Guyomar with Morgain le fee, the writer adds (p. 509)—“But after it knewe the quene Gonnore, as ye shall here tell.” In the ordinary version there is no further reference to the matter. But in MS. 337, f. 187, col. 2, the narrator returns to the adventure as he had promised (f. 114*b*, col. 2) and describes the visit of Merlin to Morgain le fee after her disappearance from the court, and tells how he comforts her. Now, on p. 508 of the English translation, we read of Morgain le fee that “she was a noble clergesse, and of Astronomye cowde she I-nough, for Merlin hadde hir taught; and after he lerned hir I-nough, as ye shall heren afterward.” But we do not “heren afterward,” except in the unique French version of MS. 337, in which we find that he teaches her many things, and she in turn almost makes the enchanter prefer her to Nimiane his love.

On p. 527 of the English translation (that is, in the portion not represented in this unique French version) we read of the reproof that king Loth gives Agravain for his impure thinking, and then we find a passing reference to an unpleasant accident which befell the young man, “as the booke shall yow devyse here-after.” In all the subsequent story, however, we discover no further reference to the matter; while MS. 337, f. 255, col. 1, gives the story in full, though with some variation. For instance, in the English version (p. 527) we read “that he langwissid longe a-boue the erthe for the vilonye that he dide to a mayden, that rode with hir frende, with whom he faught till that he hadde hym discounfited and maymed of oon of his armes.” The French has (f. 255) “il li trenchast la teste.”

The inference from these facts is obvious: Whoever undertook to write the later portion of the romance of Merlin worked over an older version, and was too careless to notice the inconsistencies and contradictions of one part of his narrative with another. This older version may have been that of MS. 337,<sup>1</sup> from which the later writer borrowed now and then a hint. Paulin Paris sees in this special version evidence that it was composed earlier than the Lancelot.<sup>2</sup> This suggestion, however, raises a question that may safely be left till we have the promised edition of MS. 337.

To determine exactly the influence that this special version had upon the composition of the last third of the Book of Arthur, is not easy without a printed text. But, as already noted, the

<sup>2</sup> Compare the remarks of Gaston Paris (Intro. to Merlin, p. xxiv.) on the priority of the Lancelot over the Book of Arthur. I cannot discuss the question, but I shall be surprised if critical comparison of the texts when they are published will altogether justify G. Paris. I note merely a few of the passages in the Merlin and the Lancelot where the two romances refer to the same incidents:—

1.—The birth of Merlin is recounted in the Lancelot, part i., chapter vi.: “Cœ merlin fut ègèdre du dyable. Et cœ il fut amoureux de la dame du lac” (ed. of 1488), but with difference enough, as P. Paris remarks,<sup>a</sup> to show that the Merlin and the Lancelot are not by the same author.

2.—The death of Lancelot is referred to in an interpolated passage<sup>b</sup> of the Merlin (p. 147).

3.—The trouble that Guyomar caused the realm of Logres, “as the tale shall rehearse here-after,” is referred to in the Merlin (pp. 316, 317).

4.—The marvels that Guynebans performs for a maiden (Merlin, p. 361 sqq.) are paralleled in the Lancelot.<sup>c</sup>

5.—The origin of Morgain’s hate for the queen (Merlin, pp. 508, 509) is explained in the Lancelot.<sup>d</sup>

6.—The adventure of Agravain and his cure (Merlin, p. 527) are touched upon in the Lancelot.<sup>e</sup>

7.—The adventure of Ban at the castle of Agravadain (Merlin, ch. xxx) is paralleled in the Lancelot.<sup>f</sup>

8.—The loss of the castle of Trebes (Merlin, p. 699) is described at the beginning of the Lancelot.

An incident not found in the Merlin is referred to in the Lancelot. Reference is there made to the Perron Merlin, “where Merlin had killed the two enchanters.” Ibid. iii. 287.

later writer seems to have taken a hint here and there. For instance, a sort of variant of the adventure of king Ban at the castle of the Lord of the Marsh (Eng. chap. xxx.) is found at f. 184b, with the difference that in this French version the niece plays the leading part instead of the daughter, and that the setting of the two incidents is not the same. To inquire particularly into the motives for the rejection of so much of this old version would lead us too far. If the reason lay in the salacious quality of many of the incidents, one might ask why the adventure of Guyomar and Morgain le fee should have been retained, especially as it is apropos of nothing, and occurs at the very point where the ordinary version begins to differ from this one. But taken as a whole the ordinary version is not so highly seasoned with realistic love adventures as the version it replaced, which is an almost continuous catalogue of lechery. A more plausible explanation, perhaps, is that after the old version had been written, the Lancelot appeared and some writer conceived the plan of recasting the Merlin as an introduction to the Lancelot. There are some difficulties in this view, but M. Gaston Paris regards it as probable.<sup>1</sup> Whatever our view of the relative age of the two versions, the one which the sense of the Middle Ages fixed upon as preferable seems, in spite of incoherency and needless details, to possess more connection and to move forward more definitely toward the end than this crude and formless congeries of adventures.

2. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 344.

The only peculiarity worthy of special attention in this manuscript is that after f. 182, col. 2, l. 36, the story is suddenly compressed into a few pages, so that the end is reached on <sup>1</sup> This may well be true of that part of the Merlin between pp. 509 and 699; but as for the part between pp. 107 and 509 there may be more doubt. The interpolations are numerous, and they need critical handling with the help of a critical text before the question can be settled.

f. 184, col. 1.<sup>1</sup> This fact would of itself be sufficient to exclude this manuscript from being regarded as the possible original of the English translation, even though we took no account of minor differences. Yet these smaller differences are considerable, in spite of frequent verbal agreement. For instance, the important passage f. 85*b*, col. 2.; Eng. p. 23, is much longer in the French than in the English; nor is this contraction due to the English translator, for we find the same in MS. 105. Exceedingly interesting is it, however, to find mentioned at this point “maistre Martins,” whose name does not appear in most of the texts, though it is found in the English translation:—

“Et ki vouldroit nomeir les rois qui deuant i furent et lor uie uoldroit oir, si gardaist en lestoire de bretaine que len apelle brutus, ke maistre martins de rouain retrait de latin en romans.”

In the English version (p. 23) the reader is referred to a book on the history of the Britons that “maister martyñ traunslated out of latyn.” As most of the manuscripts omit this name, its <sup>1</sup> The corresponding portion in the English version extends from p. 521, l. 31, to p. 699. Comparing the two versions, we find the parallel almost complete as far as f. 182, col. 2, l. 36; Eng. p. 521, l. 31, when Elizer, son of King Pelles, sets out accompanied by a squire. But in place of the long series of adventures related in our version we have a short account of his proceeding directly to Carlion, where Arthur and his Queen, King Ban, and King Bohors receive him with honour, and tell him of the embassy of Loth and his sons to the princes. While they are talking, the news comes to Ban and Bohors that King Claudas is ravaging their country. They at once take their departure, and without stopping go to their own country (“et san vont droit au lor terres,” f. 182*b*, col. 1). All this is, of course, a wide variation from the English version. Then the story turns again to King Loth and his four sons, The King gets Minoras the forester to send messengers to the princes, and then goes his way, meets the princes and secures their promise of help. After this he returns to Arthur at Camelot, where Elizer is knighted. The princes come to help Arthur against the Saxons, and succeed in defeating them before the City of Clarence, after which they kneel before Arthur and ask pardon for their rebellion. He forgives them, and they become his men. Here the tale ends, f. 184, col. 1.

This short version I incline to regard as a condensation rather than an earlier and less diffuse narrative, though I find it not easy to see why some incidents should be passed over while others are retained. A possible reason for the abridgment is that the copyist wished to save parchment for the Lancelot and the Quête du Saint-Graal which follow.

presence here would seem to indicate that this manuscript stands in somewhat closer relations than do the other manuscripts to the family of manuscripts on which our English translation is based. The long passage with regard to the Saint-Graal in this manuscript may have been condensed into a form like that from which the English passage was translated, or possibly the shorter version may be the original; but this seems hardly probable, as the longer version is found in Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 747, which is perhaps the oldest text of the first portion of the romance.<sup>1</sup>

As in the case of so many other manuscripts, the verbal differences alone are sufficient to compel the rejection of this version as the actual working original of the English translation. For instance, in the list of knights (E. p. 212; French, f. 122, cols. 1 and 2) we have such differences as: "And the forthe was Antor"—"et li quars ector ces alvouez"; "the ix<sup>e</sup> was Gifflet"—"li.ix. li fiz do de carduel." Conclusive also is the variation in the French passage quoted in the English version (p. 485) and what we find here (f. 175, col. 1, l. 6).

"Et li heraut comansent a crier, et cil criez darmes per-mi ces rans. 'or i paurait qui bien lon ferait. or iert veus qui bien lon ferait.'"

3. Bib. Nat. Nouv. acq. fr. 4166.

This unique manuscript is of peculiar interest, as it supplies a missing link in the history of the French Arthurian romances. It contains the prose romance of Joseph of Arimathea, the romance of Merlin up to the coronation of Arthur, and the romance of Perceval,<sup>2</sup> which exists only in this prose version. Gaston Paris regards these three romances as prose versions of the three poems of Robert de Borron.<sup>3</sup> This conclusion is reasonably certain as regards the first two, and not improbable as regards the last, but perhaps we have not sufficient evidence for a final judgment. The Merlin does not differ widely from the ordinary texts, though the verbal differences are often considerable. The manuscript is beautifully executed, but it would have excited comparatively little attention, were it not for the unique Perceval, which adds one more continuation to the Merlin.<sup>1</sup>

4. Huth MS., London.<sup>2</sup>

This manuscript, like the one just noticed, contains a unique continuation of the original romance of Merlin. The point of divergence is the coronation of Arthur. In the opinion of Gaston Paris this version, "like the ordinary continuation of the Merlin," was made "for the purpose of connecting the Merlin of Robert de Borron with the Lancelot and other compositions."<sup>3</sup> The principal interest that it possesses for us is that it contains the original of a portion of Malory's Morte Darthur.<sup>4</sup>

5. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 98.

This, perhaps, hardly deserves to rank as a special version. The entire manuscript contains the Saint-Graal, Merlin, Lancelot, and along with the Merlin the so-called Prophecies, singularly dovetailed into the ordinary text of the long romance. Variations from the English version are scattered throughout the text. On f. 138*b*, col. 2, the longer version,<sup>5</sup> with no mention of "maister Martyn," is given instead of that found in the English text, p. 23. The list of knights (f. 173, col. 2, and f. 173*b*) agrees more closely with the list in the translation on p. 212, than do the lists in many of the other manuscripts. Still, we have such variations as: "Le ix<sup>e</sup> le fil le Duc de Carduelz, marech de la roche" (f. 173, col. 2), and "the ix<sup>e</sup> was Gifflet" (Eng. p. 212), etc. The French passage quoted on p. 485 of the English translation differs considerably from the same passage in this manuscript, f. 222*b*, col. 1, l. 19, which reads: "Et li herralz commencerent a crier permi ces rens, or y paira qui bien fera et honour auoir vouldra," though of course the difference is almost wholly verbal. Even less difference appears between the French quoted on p. 563 of the English translation and the version of this manuscript (f. 239, col. 1).

In the list of knights (f. 241*b*), MS. 98 presents essentially the same version as the English text (p. 576 sqq.). In Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 95, however, a much more contracted version is found (f. 313). Many other passages agree almost word for word,<sup>1</sup> so that were it not for the violent interjection of the Prophecies towards the end this manuscript would agree about as closely with our English version as do most of the other manuscripts. The union of the Prophecies with the text of the romance is not very skilfully made. The Prophecies are merely cut into fragments and pieced in as follows:—The first passage begins on f. 250, col. 1, l. 19, and extends to f. 258, col. 1, l. 27. Then the Merlin begins again, and continues to f. 276, col. 1, l. 14. The Prophecies then recommence, and extend to the end of the romance, f. 287*b*. The next leaf begins with the Lancelot.

Some changes in the Merlin were necessarily made, in order to accommodate the Prophecies. We find in this version no account of the enchanted tower in which Merlin is confined by his love (Eng. p. 681), nor of Arthur's charge to Gawain to go in search of Merlin (Eng. pp. 680-682). This French version, however, tells us of the dwarf who was dubbed a knight (Eng. p. 682), and conducts him to the court of King Arthur. Then follows: "Mais atant se tait or li conte deulx a parler, et retorne a parleir dez prophecies de merlins" (f. 276, col. 1). Of Merlin we hear no more, except as he answers the questions of Antoine. The adapter does not allow Merlin to enter upon his enchanted sleep, for the obvious reason that he is needed for the Prophecies.<sup>1</sup>

Having thus examined and dismissed the versions that evidently could not have served as the actual working originals of the English translation, we have yet to consider the manuscripts which substantially represent the English translation. To enter into a minute comparison of the variations in the different French manuscripts would swell our pages to inordinate proportions, and would be of little real gain to the reader.<sup>2</sup> Until several of the more important manuscripts have been properly collated and printed, any comparison dealing largely with details will be more confusing than helpful. I shall attempt, therefore, in the following pages merely to trace in a rough sketch the chief lines of divergence, and tentatively to group the different versions. By a series of approximations we may finally select the version which on the whole is most closely represented by the English text, but we must not expect to find complete agreement.

<sup>1</sup> The strange French romance known as the Prophéties de Merlin might, as Gaston Paris remarks (Introd. to Merlin, p. xxv. note), be regarded as another continuation of the original romance of Merlin. In these Prophecies there is far more said than done; and the burden of the talk falls upon Merlin and Bishop Antoine. I have not taken especial account of the Prophecies, but they exist in a considerable number of MSS. and in printed editions of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. It may be worth while to note that MS. 5229 (old No. 236) (xiv.-xv. cent.) in the Bibl. de l'Arsenal, catalogued as Histoire de Merlin, is nothing but the Prophecies.

<sup>2</sup> As one minor difference, I note that, except in a few MSS., the paragraphs do not begin at the same points. Sommer's remark to the contrary (Morte Darthur, iii. p. 7) was based upon study of a small proportion of the MSS.

It will add to clearness if we set aside at the outset as many of the remaining manuscripts as are plainly to be excluded. We thus dismiss as mere fragments—Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 2455 (list No. 7); Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 423 (list No. 13); Bib. Nat. Côté dons, No. 1638 (list No. 22). We may also reject the manuscripts that contain nothing more of the romance than the paraphrase in prose of Robert de Borron's poem of Merlin. There can be no doubt that the translator used one of the complete versions of what we may call the vulgate Merlin; for the English version bears no marks of having been pieced together with the short Merlin of one manuscript and the Book of Arthur from another manuscript, but presents in the main a closely literal translation of one of the French versions. Furthermore, each of the manuscripts containing the first branch only of Merlin (pp. 1–107) differs too widely in several essentials to allow us to accept it as the actual basis of the English translation. The manuscripts which we exclude are the following:—

Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 748 (list No. 3); Bib. de l'Arsn. MS. fr. 2996 (list No. 4); Bib. de l'Arsn. MS. fr. 2997 (list No. 5); Bib. Nat. Nouv. acq. fr. 4166 (list No. 16); Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 113 (list No. 27).

After these deductions there still remains a considerable number of manuscripts which call for more extended discussion. In many particulars they all agree most surprisingly with the English version. From all of them may be selected long passages which are almost literally reproduced in the English translation. On the other hand, certain other critical passages differ widely from the English text; and these I have taken as points of departure in my tentative classification.

If we were fortunate enough to have but a single authentic version of the French romance, the task of determining what is due to the translator and what to the original would be sufficiently simple. Since, however, the Merlin was one of the most popular romances of the Middle Ages, it has been preserved in so great a number of manuscripts that we are embarrassed by our riches.

Our plan involves taking up the manuscripts in something like chronological order and classifying them. Some repetition is inevitable, but I will avoid it to some extent by cross-references.

1. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 747 (list No. 2).

The verbal differences between this version and the English translation are enough of themselves to compel us to reject it from the list of possible originals. More important than mere verbal disagreement are some of the differences which I now proceed to note. The French and the English run closely parallel, with here and there a verbal difference, as far as Eng. p. 23. Then follows in the French (f. 82, col. 2, l. 29) a passage of twenty-two lines not represented at all in the translation. This evident interpolation is not found in all the manuscripts (cf. MS. 105), and is introduced in order to justify the attempted fusion of the two romances of the Saint-Graal and the Merlin. At the end of the Saint-Graal (f. 77, col. 2, l. 15) we find the words—

“Et retourne a une autre estoire de merlin, que il conuient aiouter a fine force auec lestoire del saint graal porce que branche en est et li apartient. Et comence mesires roberz de borron cele branche en tel maniere. Ml't fu iriez li annemis quant nostre sire ot este en enfer.”

In the interpolated passage (f. 82, col. 2, l. 41) the same matter is again referred to—

“Et quant li dui liure seront assamble sen i aura .i. biau, et li dui seront une meisme chose, fors tant que ie ne puis pas dire ne retraire ne droiz nest les priuees paroles de ioseph et de ihū crist. Einsi dist mes sires roberz de borron qui cest conte retrait," etc.

In this passage, furthermore, no mention is made of the mysterious "maister Martyn" of our English version. He is mentioned in but few French MSS.; and one of the few (B. N. MS. fr. 105) stands in other particulars in closer relations with our English version than do any of the other French texts.

On f. 84b begins an interpolation of ninety-two lines relating to the Saint-Graal, a passage which differs considerably from our English version (pp. 32, 33).

The most interesting feature of this manuscript is, that it sharply marks off the Romance of Merlin (Eng. pp. 1-107) from the Book of Arthur which follows. On f. 102, at the end of the Merlin, is the passage in which Robert de Borron formally terminates the Romance of Merlin. There are nine lines and a half on f. 102b; the remainder of the page is blank.<sup>1</sup> The Book of Arthur begins at the top of f. 103.

I shall content myself with the mention of a few other differences between this version and the English translation. The list of knights (fr. f. 125, col. 2; Eng. p. 212) differs so widely in the two versions that to exhibit all the variations I should have to copy the whole. For instance, the French has—"li neuïemes li filz do de carduel"; the English, "the ix<sup>e</sup> was Gifflet"; "li onziemes gurnay li bloiz," which hardly represents the English, "the xj. drias de la forrest sauage."

<sup>1</sup> Paulin Paris makes much of this formal mark of division, as being designed to indicate the limits of the original Romance of Merlin. He is probably justified in his inference, but there is a bare possibility that this blank is due to the practice common in the Middle Ages of dividing the work of transcription among several copyists. Another blank of a column and a half (f. 188b) occurs without any break whatever in the story. Most of the MSS. take no more account of this transition to the Book of Arthur than to begin a new paragraph. In one or two cases even this slight break is omitted.

In the list of kings and princes (Eng. pp. 643, 644) the French (f. 215, col. 1) differs considerably in the numerals, and altogether omits Ydier and Aguysans.

It would be easy to furnish additional proofs that this manuscript did not serve as the basis of our translation. Yet in several points it is more in harmony with the English version than, for example, B. N. MS. fr. 24,394, which omits passages found in the English (pp. 146, 147, 187, 188, etc.), and also in MSS. 747, 105, etc.

2. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 770 (list No. 8).

This manuscript shows a large number of striking resemblances to B. N. MS. fr. 95, but still has a considerable individuality. MS. 770 cannot be the original of our translation, but it is interesting in that it mentions “maistre martins” (f. 127*b*, col. 1, l. 12)—

“Mais quant il morront parler il naront talent de moi ocirre. et Ie men irai avec aus, et tu ten iras es parties ou cil sont qui ont le saint vaissel, et tous iors mais sera volentiers tes liures ois, et qui vaurra sauoir la uie des rois qui en la grant bretaine furent ains que la crestientez i venist, si regart en lestoire des bretons. cest en vn liure que maistre martins de beures tranlata de latin en romans. Mais atant se taist ore li contes de ceste cose et retourne a lestoire. Or dit li contes quil ot vn roi en bretaine qui eut a nom coustans.”

As in MS. 95, the list of knights shows remarkable agreement with the English (p. 212), but there are some differences. For instance, in the English the twenty-second knight is “Placidus ly gays,” in the French, “Ierohas” (f. 174*b*, cols. 2 and 3); but the English has also “the xxiiij Ierohas lenches,” the French, “Ierohas de lanches.”

The two French passages quoted in the English translation exhibit verbal differences, not due to the English transcriber.

For the first passage (Eng. 485) we have (f. 249*b*, col. 3, l. 35)—
“et li hiraut comencent a crier or i parra qui bien le fera or ert veu.” Compare also Eng. p. 563, with the French (f. 271, col. 2, l. 9)—

“Et il les fist si fu teus li contes chou est li commencemens des auentures dou pais. par quoi li mervilleus lyons fu aterre et que fils de Roi et de Roine destruira et conuenra quil soit li mieudres chevaliers qui lors sera el monde.”

A conclusive proof that this version did not serve as the basis of our translation is, that MS. 770, like MS. 95, gives the contracted version of the list of the princes (f. 274, col. 2, Eng. p. 576 sqq.), a list which is expanded in MS. 98 and several other MSS. in the same way as in the English version.

3. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 95 (list No. 9).

This is, perhaps, the most gorgeous of all the manuscripts of Merlin, and from the beauty of the miniatures and the illuminated letters seems to belong to the latter part of the thirteenth century, if not to the early part of the fourteenth. In many passages it stands as close to the English version as any of the manuscripts, but it contains additions and omissions enough to compel us to reject it. For instance, it does not mention “maistre Martins,” and presents the following passage<sup>1</sup> as the equivalent for the English version (p. 23):—

 estre en la compaignie del saint graal. lors sera tes liures aioins au liure ioseph. si sera la cose bien esprouuee de ma paine et de la toie si en aura diex merchi se lui meisme plaist. et cil qui loront*

proieront nostre signor por nos. et quant li doi liure seront ensamble si i aura .i. biau liure. Et li doi seront une meisme cose, fors tant que ne puis pas dire ne retraire les priuees paroles de ih'u c'st et de ioseph." (f. 123, col. 2.)

On the other hand, the list of the forty-three knights (f. 192*a*) shows in the forms of the names and in the order a striking agreement with the English (p. 212). Even the variants are remarkable for the particulars in which they agree. The English has, for example, "The xxix. Agresianx, the nevew of the wise lady of the foreste with-oute returne." The French omits the name, and reads, "Li uintenoefismes fu li fieus a la sage dame de la forest sans retour." As the thirty-second knight the English has "kehedin de belly"; the French, "Kehedins li biaux." Most of the other variations in the two lists are mere differences of spelling.

Without burdening our pages with minor differences, such, for example, as Eng. 563 and Fr. f. 309*b*, col. 1, we find convincing proof that neither this manuscript nor exact copies of it could have been used by the English translator, when we compare the list of the princes who come to Salisbury Plain (Eng. pp. 576–578) with the list in the French (f. 313 a and b). The two versions agree almost word for word, except that the English adds a line or two of description to each knight. These additions amount to about nineteen lines to the page (p. 576½–p. 577½), and are found in MS. 98, f. 241*b*, in MS. 105, and others. The evident explanation is, that MS. 95 represents a group of thirteenth-century MSS. afterwards expanded by a copyist who was also an author.

4. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 24,394 (list No. 10).

This manuscript is remarkable for striking points of agreement with the English version, and for equally striking omissions. I have space for but a small portion of the variants.

I give them in the order of their occurrence:—English, p. 15, “x. monthes”; French, f. 112, “ix. mois.” Eng. p. 15, “xij. monthes”; Fr. f. 112, “xviij. mois.” Eng. p. 61, “thre yere”; Fr. f. 129, col. 2, “plus de ij. ans.” Considerable other verbal differences occur between Eng. pp. 60, 61 and Fr. f. 128*b*–f. 129. This MS. agrees essentially with MS. 95 in presenting the longer version (f. 114*b*–f. 115) in place of the one found in the English translation, p. 23. In giving the list of kings who came to Arthur’s court the English (p. 108) mentions six, the French but five<sup>1</sup> (f. 141*b*, col. 1).

The French version (f. 149*b*, col. 2) omits a passage extending in the English version from “Now, seith the boke” (p. 146, l. 27) to “Now, seith the boke” (p. 147, l. 30). Two other omitted passages are Eng. p. 187, ll. 8–18 (cf. Fr. f. 157*b*, col. 1); Eng. p. 188, ll. 5–11 (cf. Fr. f. 157*b*, col. 2). Characteristic variations and omissions appear in the following passages:—

ENG. pp. 176, 177.

“And so com) the renoun in to the hoste that theȝ durste not ride that wey withoute grete foyson) of peple. And so on) that part the kynge Ydiers kepte hem so streyte that theȝ myȝht haue no socoure of no vitaile.

“The tother Citee that theȝ yede to stuffe was cleped Wydesans, and thedir yede the kynge Ventres of Garlot and ledde with hym knyghtes that were lefte of the hoste.”

FR. f. 155*b*, col. 1.

“Si reuint li renons en lost si qu’il noserent mie cele part cheualcher sans mout grant fuison de gent.

<sup>1</sup> All six are named in MS. 747, f. 111, col. 1; f. 119*b*, cols. 1 and 2; in MS. 105, etc.

ENG. p. 177.

“and the wif of kynge Ventres was suster to kynge Arthur on his moder side, Ygerne, that was wif to Vterpendragon, and wif also to Hoel, Duke of TintageH, that be-gat basyne, the wif of kynge Ventres; and upon this basyne be-gate he his sone, that was so gode a knyght and hardy, as ye shall here her-after, and how he was oon of the C.C.I. knyghtes of the rounde table, and oon of the moste preysed, and his right name was Galashyn.”

ENG. p. 179.

FR. f. 155*b*, col. 1.

“et la feme al roi nantre fu [f. 155*b*, col. 2] seror le roi artu de par sa mere ygerne, qui auoit este fille al duc hoel de tintaioel. Si ot a non blaisine et de li ot li rois nantres son fil, qui puis fu compains de la table roonde, et fu nommes par son droit non galescin.”

FR. f. 156, col. 1.

“li rois loth sen ala a une chite a <sup>M</sup><sub>iii</sub> combatans.”

In the list of knights (Eng. p. 212, Fr. f. 163*b*, cols. 1 and 2) we find—

ENGLISH.

FRENCH.

No. 2. “Boors de Gannes.”

“Bohors ses freres.”

No. 9. “Gifflet.”

“gyrfe le fil do de cardoel.”

No. 18. “blioberis.”

“bliobleris de gannes.”

No. 21. “Aladan the crespes.”

No. 29. “Agresianx, the newew of the wise lady,” etc.

“Agreucil, le fil a lasage dame,” etc.

The English p. 519 has an unusual reading—

FR. f. 239, col. 2.

“and therefore now telle hym that he shall fynde me ther on seinte Berthelmewes day.”

“Or li dites qu’il mi i trouera le ior de la nostre dame en septembre.”

On p. 525 the English agrees with the French—

ENGLISH.

FR. f. 241, col. 1.

“the kyng Looth of Orcanye sendith hym to wite that he sholde be with hym at Arestuell in Scotlonde on oure lady day in Septembre.”

“que li rois loth dorcane li mande si comme uos aues oi qu’il soit encontre lui a arestuel en escoche le ior de la nostre dame en
septembre.”

Wide variations may be pointed out in abundance, as well as almost literal agreement. In the list of princes who come to Salisbury (Eng. pp. 576-578), this Fr. version (f. 254*b*, col. 1 to f. 255, col. 1) supplies all the omissions of MS. 95. The slight variations in the Roman numerals were probably due to haste in copying. Interesting, too, it is to find such agreement as in the following passage, for some of the manuscripts that on the whole agree much more closely with the English version omit the descriptive word breton.

ENG. p. 615.

FR. f. 265, col. 2.

“and he harped a lay of Bre-teigne ful swetely that wonder was to here.”

“et il harpoit .i. lai breton tant doucement que ce estoit melodie

The unexpected agreement with the English version of such a manuscript as B. N. 24,394, makes difficult a thoroughly satisfactory grouping of the different versions. A long process of collation must precede any such classification.

5. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 110 (list No. 11).

This version agrees with the English translation in several particulars, more closely than does MS. 24,394; but it makes no mention of “maistre Martins,” and has the passage (f. 50, col. 3) omitted from the English, p. 23. The lists of knights

(Eng. p. 212; Fr. f. 82, cols. 1 and 2) agree in the main, though the French has some words of description not reproduced in the translation. Other lists—e.g., Eng. pp. 576–578, Fr. f. 142*b*–f. 143; Eng. pp. 593, 594, Fr. f. 145*b*; Eng. p. 616, Fr. f. 149, col. 3—show very close agreement. The two passages quoted from the French (Eng. p. 485, Fr. f. 126*b*, col. 1; Eng. p. 563, Fr. f. 140*b*, col. 1) agree, except for a letter or two, with MS. 24,394, f. 230, col. 1; f. 251, col. 2, l. 15.

6. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 749 (list No. 12).

At the beginning of the Merlin we find above a row of five miniatures the rubric: “Chi co[m]ence lestoire de merlin que mesire robbers de borron translata.” This manuscript mentions (f. 132, col. 2) “mesire martins de roescestre,” who appears in the English version (p. 23) as “maister Martyn.” Nowhere else, except in Arsn. MS. 3482, is he called Martin of Rochester,<sup>1</sup> though a certain Martin is mentioned in a few other manuscripts.<sup>2</sup> This passage gives the long version, a part of which does not appear in the English (f. 132, col. 2)—

“et quant li doi liure seront ensamble. si aura .i. bel liure et li dui seront une meisme chose fors tant que ie ne puis pas dire ne drois nest les priuees paroles de ih'u crist et de ioseph nest cel tans nauoit encore gaires rois crestiens en engleterre. Ne de ceuls qui i auoient este ne me tient a retraire fors tant come a cest conte monte et qui valroit<sup>3</sup> oir conter les rois qui deuant furent, et lor vie volroit oir si qui fist et regardast<sup>4</sup> en lestoire de bretagne que on apelle brutus que mesire martins de roescestre translata de latin en romans ou il le troua si le porroies<sup>5</sup> sauoir vraiment.”

Other minor variations forbid us to suppose that the English translator used this version, or a copy of it, though the resemblances are at times surprisingly close. In the list of knights (Eng. p. 212; Fr. f. 195, col. 1) the names are meant to be alike, except that in the English we have "the xlj. bleoris the sone of kynge Boors," and in the French, "li xli.isme fu banins li filleus au roi bohort de gausnes."

In the passages quoted from the French, the first (Eng. p. 485) differs in but one essential word—bien for checun—

FR. f. 275, col. 2, l. 32.—"et hiraut comencent a crier | chi est li honors darmes or i parra qui bien le fera |"

The second passage (Eng. p. 563) shows more variation—

FR. f. 300, col. 2, l. 22.—"et il les fist si fu i teus li contes. ce sont ichi les auentures dou pais qui par le merueilleus lion fu a terre, et qui fu fieus de roi et de roine destruira et conuenra quil soit castes et li mieudres chr's qui soit aillors el monde."

In the list of princes (Eng. pp. 576–578), the French (f. 305) gives the expanded version, in the main the same as in the English version, though with some variations in the numerals and the descriptive details. For example, Eng. p. 576, "kynge Belynans of south wales"; Fr. (col. 2), "rois belinans de nor-gales." I could multiply examples, but those already given must suffice. In classing this version we must place it with the small group of manuscripts that most closely represent the English, though the coincidence is not so great as in MS. 105. Perhaps it stands in closest relation to Arsn. MS. fr. 3482. The manuscript breaks off at f. 330*b* with the words translated in the English by "and whan the [kynge saugh this]," p. 667, l. 27.

7. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 19,162 (list No. 14).

This manuscript may be classed with MS. 24,394. For Eng. p. 23 this MS. (f. 152b)<sup>1</sup> gives the ordinary version, differing from the English, with no mention of "maistre Martins." The list of kings (f. 187, col. 1) is the same as in MS. 24,394 (cf. Eng. p. 108). The equivalent of line fifth on p. 143 of the English is omitted from MS. 19,162, f. 197, col. 2. The passage corresponding to Eng. p. 145, l. 15 to Eng. p. 150, l. 29 is lost from the French manuscript between f. 197 and f. 198, so that we cannot tell whether the passage on pp. 146, 147 is omitted as in MS. 24,394. But this version, like MS. 24,394, omits a line corresponding to a line in the Eng. p. 176, as well as the words "of Gale" (Eng. p. 179). So, too, the passages, Eng. p. 187, ll. 8-18, Fr. f. 208, col. 1; Eng. p. 188, ll. 5-11, Fr. f. 208, col. 2. In the list of knights (Eng. p. 212, Fr. f. 216, col. 2) the version is essentially that of MS. 24,394. On f. 313b, col. 1, the usual version "de la nostre dame septembre" appears in place of "Berthelmewes day" of the Eng. p. 519. For the Eng. pp. 576-578 this manuscript gives the usual expanded version.

8. Brit. Mus. MS. Add. 10,292<sup>2</sup> (list No. 20).

This version may be classed with MS. 24,394, as is evident from the regular variations that appear in the two versions.

ENGLISH.	FRENCH.
p. 15. "x. monthes."	f. 79, col. 1. "ix. mois."
"xij. monthes."	"xviiij. mois."

For Eng. pp. 22, 23 the French, f. 80*b*, col. 3 to f. 81, col. 1, gives the ordinary expanded version, with no mention of "maistre Martins."

The list of kings, with the number of attendant knights (Eng. p. 108), agrees exactly, except that the French, f. 101*b*, col. 1, omits the name of Ydiers. On f. 108, col. 2, the French has nothing corresponding to about a page of the English (pp. 146, 147). On f. 113, col. 1, the French omits a line and a half found in the English, p. 176 (bottom), as well as in MS. 105. On f. 113, col. 2, the French version of Eng. p. 177 is confused, and not so exact as MS. 105. On f. 114*b*, col. 2, the French omits the passage found in the Eng. p. 187, ll. 8–18. From f. 114*b*, col. 2 is omitted the equivalent of Eng. p. 188, ll. 5–11. The list of knights,<sup>1</sup> f. 120, cols. 1 and 2, agrees closely with the English, p. 212, but with such variations as—No. 9, "Gifflet" in the English for "Giffles le fil do de carduel"; No. 29, "the newew" for "le fil." The passage quoted from MS. 10,292 on pp. 700, 701 of the Merlin of the E.E.T.S., agrees almost word for word with B. N. MSS. fr. 96 and 24,394.

9. Bib. Nat. MS. f. 96 (list No. 24).

This manuscript closely agrees at most points with B. N. MS. 24,394. I give below a few of the data which compel us to reject this version as the original of our translation—

ENGLISH.	FRENCH.
p. 15. "x. monthes."	f. 63, col. 2. "ix. mois."
"xii. monthes."	"xviii. mois."
p. 61. "thre yere."	f. 74, col. 1. "plus de .ii. ans."

For the English of p. 23 the French (f. 65*b*, col. 1) gives the ordinary expanded version, with no mention of "maistre Martins." On f. 82, col. 2, Ydiers is omitted from the list of kings (Eng. p. 108). The French also omits (f. 87*b*, col. 2) the passage corresponding to Eng. p. 146, l. 27 to p. 147, l. 30. From f. 155*b*, col. 1, the French omits a line corresponding to the English, p. 176 (bottom). At this point MS. 96 and MS. 24,394 agree word for word. The English, p. 177, differs widely from the French, f. 91*b*, col. 1 (cf. MS. 24,394). From f. 91*b*, col. 2, the same omission occurs as in MS. 24,394 (cf. Eng. p. 179). The list of knights, f. 96*b*, is essentially that of MS. 24,394, and agrees closely with the English, p. 212. Wide differences between the English, pp. 438, 439, and the French, f. 134, are found in the numerals, a few of which I select—

ENGLISH.	FRENCH.
"xij. kynges."	x.
"xij. princes."	"x. roys et d'un duc."
"xij. kynges."	x.

Numerous points of difference might be noted, but we need not multiply words. There can be no doubt that this MS. presents essentially the same version as Brit. Mus. MS. Add. 10,292 and B. N. MS. 24,394. On comparing MS. 96, f. 176*b*, col. 2, l. 8, to f. 177, col. 1, with MS. 10,292, f. 216, col. 3, I found the two agreeing almost word for word, except that MS. 96 has later forms for almost all the words.

10. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 117 (list No. 25).

This cannot be taken as the exact original of the English version, though many passages agree almost word for word. For the English of p. 23, MS. 117, f. 55*b*, col. 1, gives the ordinary expanded version, and does not refer to "maistre Martins." In the list of kings (Eng. p. 108; Fr. f. 73, col. 1) the French mentions "Constant qui estoi[t] roi descosse," while the English has "Aguysas." The French omits "Ydiers." The list of knights (Eng. p. 212; Fr. f. 86*b*, col. 2) differs very widely. The amour of Guyomar and Morgain (Eng. p. 508) is much abridged in this MS. (f. 126*b*, col. 2). The bits of French on p. 485 and p. 563 of the English version agree closely with the corresponding passages in this MS. (f. 123*b*, col. 2; f. 134, col. 2). This MS. has the expanded version (f. 136, col. 2 to 136*b*, col. 1) of the list of princes (Eng. pp. 576-578), and, except in a few of the numerals and other minor details, agrees closely at this point with the English. On p. 620 of the English we have: "Whan the archebisshop hadde redde this letter"; while the French has: "Quant larchevesque de brise ot les lettres leues" (f. 142, col. 2).<sup>1</sup> The name again occurs in the French a little later (f. 145, col. 2: cf. Eng. p. 640). Our English version does not once mention the archbishop by name, though his name appears in many of the French MSS. as well as in Geoffrey of Monmouth. On the other hand, MS. 117 omits much; for example, nearly the whole of the equivalent of Eng. p. 616 (Fr. f. 141, col. 2), including all of the list given in the English and found even in MS. 24,394.

11. Arsenal MS. No. 3482 (list 21).

In spite of the very defective state of this manuscript, it has for us more value than some of those better preserved. It is not the exact original of our translation, but it agrees so closely in a great number of passages that I have merely collated with other manuscripts the transcripts I had made from this version before examining B. N. MS. 105. In a number of passages, however, I must confess that this version is widely at variance with the English. The test passage of the English, p. 23, appears in this MS. (p. 14, col. 3) in part in the usual expanded form, but with the addition of the rare version found in the English translation, suggesting that anyone who is interested in the history of the Britons may study it—“en lystoire de bretaine que len appelle bretus, que mesires martins de rocestre translata de latin en francois, ou la trouua si la porrez sauoir uraiement. En cel temps en i auoit .i. qui estoit constans apeles,” etc.

The numerals afford a peculiarly delicate test of agreement; for the Roman notation used in the manuscripts is far more liable to errors of transcription than the Arabic. The variations in the numerals of this MS. and of the English translation are great enough, but not so striking as in some other MSS. For instance (Fr. p. 62, col. 3), the names of the six kings who came to Arthur's court after his coronation are here given as in the English (p. 108), with the exact number of knights accompanying each king. Even Ydiers is mentioned, though omitted from many of the MSS. I have prepared long lists of the numerals in the French and the English, but omit them for lack of space.<sup>1</sup> In many cases the difference is quite as striking as the agreement, though this manuscript shows less variation than most of the others.

When we turn to the passages that are found in the English, although omitted from several of the French MSS., we learn to appreciate more highly the agreement that we here find. Of the following passages all are omitted from MS. 24,394, MS. 98, etc., yet are found both in the English and in MS. 3482.

On the other hand, the English account (pp. 252-257) of King Clarion of Northumberland, and his battles with the Saxons, is more extended than the account in the French (p. 135). The name of the "arceuesques del brice" is here given (Fr. p. 295, col. 2; Fr. p. 304, col. 3) as in MS. 117, etc., though omitted from the English (p. 620, p. 640). A remarkable reading occurs on p. 243, col. 2, "et ie uous di certainement que il mi trouuerra le ior de la saint bertelemi." The English reads (p. 519), "and therfore now telle hym that he shall fynde me ther on seinte Berthelmewes day." The mention of St. Bartholomew's Day is rare, most of the manuscripts preferring the reading, "our lady day in September."

Enough evidence has been adduced to show that while this version can hardly be taken as the exact original of the English translation, the similarity is very great. I will add at this point a few passages, which are, however, no more remarkable for their agreement than hundreds of others to be found in this manuscript.

12. Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 105 (list No. 18).

This manuscript is, for our purpose, more important than any of the others, for it presents the version most nearly resembling the version of the English text. An almost literal copy of this version is found in Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 9123 (list No. 19). The two manuscripts agree in having rubrics as headings for the chapters, a feature not found in many of the MSS. of Merlin, and, indeed, lacking in the English MS. of Merlin. The passages taken especially as test passages, where the English contains a considerable amount of matter lacking in a number of the French texts, are all found in MS. 9123, as well as in MS. 105. I give a few references. MS. 9123 has the contracted version for Eng. p. 23, and mentions as the author of the history of the Britons a certain "Martins de Bieure." The essential identity with the English version may be seen by comparing Eng. pp. 146, 147 with Fr. f. 143; Eng. p. 176, Fr. f. 152, col. 3; Eng. p. 177, Fr. f. 152, col. 3; Eng. p. 179, Fr. f. 153, col. 1; Eng. p. 187, ll. 8-18, Fr. f. 155; Eng. p. 188, ll. 5-11, Fr. f. 155*b*, col. 2; Eng. p. 212, Fr. f. 162*b*, col. 3 to f. 163, col. 1. Same version as in MS. 105: Eng. p. 229, Fr. f. 167*b*, col. 3 to f. 168, col. 1; Eng. p. 485, Fr. f. 244*b*, col. 1; Eng. p. 509, Fr. f. 251*b*, col. 2; Eng. p. 563, Fr. f. 266, col. 3; Eng. p. 576, Fr. f. 269*b* to f. 270; Eng. p. 616, Fr. f. 280, col. 2. The closing pages, except for a letter here and there, are exactly as in MS. 105.

We turn now to MS. 105. This manuscript betrays innumerable evidences of haste in copying,<sup>1</sup> but in its main features it approaches most nearly to the original from which the English translation was made.

The English translation of the test passage (pp. 22, 23) is based on a version slightly differing from this one, but the agreement is more striking than appears in any of the other French versions.

<sup>1</sup> Especially noticeable is the omission of the substantive verb and of descriptive words. Compare, for instance, Eng. p. 508: "Whan Guyomar entred in to the chambre ther as was Morgain the fee, he hir salued full swetly"; Fr. f. 289*b*, col. 2: "Quant guyomar entra en la chambre ou morgain si li salua moult doucement."

CHAPTER II.

There are, of course, variations. If we compare Eng. pp. 32, 33 with the French f. 137, col. 3 to 137*b*, col. 2, we find that the manuscript has an interpolation of 92 lines relating to the Saint-Graal, not exactly reproduced in the English. On the other hand, the omissions of MS. 24,394, and others, are here supplied. Compare, e.g., Eng. pp. 146, 147 with f. 173*b*, col. 2 to f. 174, col. 2<sup>1</sup>; Eng. p. 176, Fr. f. 182*b*, cols. 2 and 3; Eng. p. 177, Fr. f. 182*b*, col. 2. The passage relating to the son of king Ventres is here given exactly, though strangely mixed in some of the versions. Eng. p. 179 reads :

“That than the kynges loot wente to the Citee of Gale with <sup>M</sup><sub>ij</sub> knyghtes and fightyng men” ;

Fr. f. 183*b*, col. 1 :

“que li roys loth sen ala a la cyte de gales a tout <sup>M</sup><sub>ij</sub> combatans.”

Many MSS. omit the words “de gales.” Eng. p. 187, ll. 8–18 is found in Fr. f. 186, and Eng. p. 188, ll. 5–11, in Fr. f. 186, col. 3.

The passage Eng. p. 229, l. 13 sqq., differs somewhat from the French f. 199, col. 3, which here is closely like MS. 24,394. But MS. 105 has the words omitted from many versions—and thus parallels the English :

“the wisest lady of alle the bloy breteyne.”

A slight difference appears also on comparing Eng. p. 509 with Fr. f. 289*b*, col. 3. The two French passages quoted in the English text have not the precise form that they bear in MS. 105. Compare the version Eng. p. 485 with Fr. f. 282, col. 2 :

“Et li heraut comencierent a crier. ici est l'onneur des armes. or i para qui bien le fera” ;

Eng. p. 563 with Fr. f. 306, col. 1 :

“Cest yci li commencemens des auentures du pays par quoi li merueilleus lyons fu aterre, et que fils de roy et de royne destruiira et couendra que il soit chastes et li mieudres cheualiers qui lors sera el monde.”

This version mentions the “archeuesques del brice” (f. 323*b*, col. 2), while the English has merely “the archebissshop” (p. 620, p. 640, etc.).

In a manuscript so carelessly copied we must not look for exact agreement with the English version ; but for that very reason we must attach considerable importance to the agreement we do find. Nearly all the manuscripts are at variance with the English p. 15. Here the numerals are the same :

ENGLISH.	FRENCH.
p. 15. "x. monthes."	f. 130 b , col. 3. "x. mois."
"ij. yere."	"xij. mois."
"xij. monthes."	"ij. ans."

The names and the numerals, Eng. p. 108, exactly agree with those in the French, though at this point most MSS. vary widely in the numerals, and omit the name of Ydiers. Less exact agreement appears Eng. pp. 145, 146 ; Fr. f. 173, col. 2 to f. 173*b*, col. 1. In the list of knights, Eng. p. 212 ; Fr. f. 193*b*, col. 3 to f. 194, col. 1, there are such differences as—

ENGLISH.	FRENCH.
No. 4, Antor.	Artus qui le nourri.
No. 9, Gifflet.	li filz au duc de cardueil.
No. 19, Canide.	Canot de lisse.
No. 30, Chalis.	Dyales lorfenin.

Other lists showing considerable variation appear, Eng. pp. 576–578, Fr. f. 309*b*, col. 2 ; Eng. p. 616, Fr. f. 322. The latter is a characteristic specimen. I omit all but the most essential details.

ENGLISH.	FRENCH.
Palerens xv.	fariens dirlande xv.
Tasurs xij.	sapharins xij.
Brinans xiiij.	ramedons xiiij.
Argans xj.	arganz xiiij.
Taurus xj.	thaurus xj.
Kahadins x.	kaamin x.

After this comparison we need scarcely devote more space to illustrative passages. There is, on the whole, none of the manuscripts of Merlin showing more general agreement with the English version than does MS. 105. Yet the verbal differences are so great as to compel us to reject even this version from being regarded as the one actually followed by the English translator. Nevertheless, very large portions of this missing French version were literally transcribed by the writer of MS. 105, as may be seen by a glance at passages where the English translator copied the French words without translating them at all.

Of like sort are many of the instances of tautology in the English text, though in some instances the fault appears to belong to the translator :—

The net result of the entire investigation of the manuscripts is negative. In other words, we have proved that the English version is not translated word for word from any of the extant French versions, though most of them tolerably represent the story as a whole, and many of them agree almost literally in a large number of passages with the English version. Two of the MSS. (MS. 105 and MS. 9123) agree on the whole more closely with the English than do any of the others, and these two doubtless belong to the family of MSS. of which one was used by the translator of our version. I must confess, then, that I have not found the exact original, but I am firmly convinced that the English version is a slavish translation of a fourteenth-century<sup>1</sup> manuscript, now lost, and that a careful collation of all the extant MSS. might enable us to find a French equivalent for almost every word of the translation.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> M. Paul Meyer, Director of the École des Chartes, to whom I submitted the French passages quoted in the English version, pp. 485, 563, assured me that the forms were those of the fourteenth century.

<sup>2</sup> As for the version of the printed editions, it need not detain us long.<sup>a</sup> The earliest edition did not appear till 1498, more than a half-century after our translation was made, and so, of course, can be of importance only in so far as the version of the printed text may represent an older manuscript original. At the beginning of my search for the version used by the English translator I compared paragraph by paragraph the English text and the French edition of 1498, and found a general agreement in the incidents, but very considerable verbal differences, and at times important omissions. I cannot take room for examples, but refer the reader to Fr. vol. i. f. 130, Eng. p. 212; Fr. vol. ii. f. 1, Eng. p. 379; Fr. vol. ii. f. 58, Eng. p. 484. Near the end of the romance, Fr. f. 172, col. 2, a sharp divergence from the English version begins, and continues to the close <sup>b</sup> (f. 172*b*) of the romance.

VIII.

TWO MERLINS OR ONE?

After this long examination of the romance, we may now consider a question that naturally suggests itself: Have we to do with two Merlins or one? This question is of no great importance in itself, but it has held too large a place in the literary history of the legend to be dismissed with a word. The answer to this question involves a comparison of all the data. For the sake of clearness, therefore, it will be well, even at the expense of some repetition, to bring together whatever can be urged with regard to the separate existence of Merlinus Ambrosius and Merlinus Caledonius (Myrddin).

Of Merlin Ambrosius<sup>1</sup> the so-called sixth-century Welsh poems know nothing. In them there is no hint of the existence of the wonder-working Merlin of the romances. The Triads, as we have seen (pp. xcix.-c.), mention Myrddin Emrys (Merlin Ambrosius), Myrddin, son of Morvryn, and Taliessin as the three principal bards of Britain, and tell of the disappearance of Myrddin, the Bard of Emrys Wledig, and his nine bardic companions. But the importance of this material in the Triads is hardly greater than must be attached to what we find in Giraldus Cambrensis, and other writers of the twelfth century.

The introduction of Merlin Ambrosius into Welsh literature (as distinguished from oral tradition) seems to be due to the Welsh translation of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae, though of course the legend may have existed as a floating popular tradition for centuries earlier. The Irish translation of Nennius belongs to the eleventh century; but the legend of Merlin, as well as the history of Arthur, was an exotic which did not thrive on Irish soil. For our earliest knowledge of the exploits of Merlin Ambrose we are, therefore, limited to two sources—Nennius and Geoffrey of Monmouth.

All that Nennius has to tell is contained in cap. xl., xli., xlii., xlvi., and lxvi. of his Historia Britonum. He does not even give us the name of Merlin; for the boy who is born without a father, and who explains to the king why his castle walls do not stand, replies, on being asked his name, "I am called Ambrose,"<sup>1</sup> the British for which is Embries, that is, the leader.<sup>2</sup> The addition of the name Merlinus is due to Geoffrey of Monmouth, writing at least three centuries later than Nennius. Geoffrey treated the legend in two different forms, the first in the Historia Regum Britanniae (1135–1147), and the second in the Vita Merlini. In the Historia the entire account of the boy Ambrose, as given by Nennius, is transferred to Geoffrey's pages, but with some changes from the text of Nennius that we possess. These changes are due in part, it may be, to the manuscript version which Geoffrey used; but more probably to his own invention.<sup>3</sup>

1. Nennius (cap. xl.) tells us that the king and his wise men, in seeking a place for a tower, came to a province called Guenet,<sup>2</sup> and, after examining the mountains of Heremus,<sup>3</sup> selected the summit of one of them as the site.—Geoffrey says merely that after going about the country they finally came to Mount Erir, and there began to build.

2. Nennius (cap. xli.) relates that the messengers who went out in search of the boy born without a father came to the field of Aelecti,<sup>4</sup> in the district of Glevesing, where they found some boys playing ball. Two of them began to quarrel, and one called the other a boy without a father. When the messengers inquired whether the child had ever had a father, the mother denied all knowledge of the manner of his conception, and assured them that the boy had no mortal father.<sup>5</sup> At this the boy was taken away to King Vortigern.

Geoffrey<sup>6</sup> tells us that the messengers found some young men playing before the gate of a city afterwards called Kaermerdin. As they played, two of the young men, whose names were Merlin and Dabutius, began to quarrel, when Dabutius reproached Merlin—"As for you, nobody knows what you are, for you never had a father." Then the messengers looked closely at Merlin, and asked the bystanders who the boy was. They obtenu en latinisant le nom gallois, mais qui trouvait assurément dans la tradition une forme avec d, puisqu'il prétend que Caermerdin (Carmarthen, ancien Maridunum) doit son nom à Merlin." The name is variously written. Villemarqué, in his Myrdhin, ou l'Enchanteur Merlin, p. 3, gives a partial list of the different forms: (1) Ancient British, Marthin; (2) Modern Welsh, Myrdhin; (3) Armorican, Marzin; (4) Scotch, Meller, Melziar; (5) French, Merlin. To these we may add: Myrdin, Myrddin, Myrddhin, Merdhin ap Morvryn, Martinus, Merlinus Ambrosius, Merlin Wyllt, Merlinus Caledonius, Merlinus Sylvestris, and Merlinus Avilonius (so named from the Avallenau). Cf. Nicolson, Eng. Hist. Library, pp. 31, 32. For the Welsh form, see p. xcvii., note 1, ante.

replied that his father was unknown, but his mother was daughter to the king of Dimetia, and now a nun in St. Peter's church in that city. The messengers thereupon went to the governor of the city, and ordered him to send Merlin and his mother to King Vortigern. On being questioned by the king, the mother replied that the boy's father was a very beautiful young man, who had the power of talking with her while remaining himself invisible, and that he had several times lain with her in the shape of a man, and left her with child. The king wondered at the recital, and ordered his counsellor, Maugantius, to tell whether the story was possible. He said that numerous instances of a like description were known, and that possibly the boy had been begotten in the same way; for Apuleius, in his book on the Demon of Socrates, had mentioned those spirits, half men, half angels, which live between the earth and the moon, and which we call incubuses. These had been known to assume human shape and to lie with women.

3. Nennius relates (cap. xlii.) that on the next day after the boy had appeared before King Vortigern a meeting was held for the purpose of putting him to death. When the boy asked the reason of his being brought there, he learned that it was with the design of sprinkling with his blood the ground on which the tower was to be built. He then requested that the wise men by whose advice this was to be done might be brought thither. When they came, he questioned them as to what was hid under the ground where the tower was building. On their confession of ignorance, he foretold successively what was to be found—the pool, the two vases, the folded tent, the two sleeping serpents, one white and the other red—and explained the meaning of their combat.

to the wise men, and the combat of the two dragons, occur on the same day, without the interval that we find in Nennius. Geoffrey substitutes two hollow stones for the vases of Nennius, and tells nothing about the folded tent in which the dragons slept. Geoffrey has the pond drained before the fight begins, while Nennius lets the combat commence at once.

From this point the agreement between Nennius and Geoffrey, in so far as Merlin is concerned, entirely ceases. The short explanation which Nennius gives of the meaning of the combat is omitted by Geoffrey, who, on the other hand, fills the greater part of his seventh book with the famous prophecies of Merlin. The remainder of Geoffrey's account of Merlin touches upon his relations with Aurelius Ambrosius and Uter-Pendragon—the two sons of Constantine. After Merlin has assisted Uter-Pendragon to win Igerna the name of the enchanter vanishes from Geoffrey's pages, except in two brief references<sup>1</sup> to his prophecies. In spite of these minor differences the accounts of Nennius and Geoffrey relate to the same personage: the additions merely show what progress the myth had made in the course of three centuries.<sup>2</sup> But if, now, we turn to Geoffrey's Vita Merlini, we meet a difficulty; for, although we still find the name Merlin, a small portion only of the account of him as given in the Historia is reproduced in the Vita, and the leading topic in the poem is the madness of Merlin the bard. Yet the identity of the bard with the enchanter is directly asserted in the poem.<sup>3</sup> With this matter we shall deal presently.

<sup>3</sup> ll. 681–683. San-Marte remarks (Die Sagen von Merlin, s. 322) that from about l. 431 Geoffrey begins to confuse Merlin Ambrosius with Merlin Caledonius. Geoffrey says (l. 681 sqq.) that Merlin the bard is the same as he who once prophesied before Vortigern; but he omits all account of the paternity of Merlin as related in the Historia.

It may be worth our while briefly to review some of the opinions held on this question. One side contends stoutly for two Merlins. It is argued that there was an enchanter of the name of Merlin, who lived, if at all, in the time of Vortigern, king of Britain, about the end of the fifth century. His history contains elements more or less mythical. The other personage was a Welsh bard, named Myrddin, who lived in the sixth century, and who went mad with grief over his friends killed in the battle of Arderlydd, in the year 573. As already remarked, Nennius knows only the fatherless boy who calls himself Ambrosius, or Embries Guletic.<sup>1</sup> Geoffrey of Monmouth repeats the story told by Nennius, adopts the name Ambrosius, and adds that of Merlinus.<sup>2</sup> His other additions in the Historia are merely supplementary, and in no essential particulars contradictory to the account in Nennius. In the Vita Merlini Geoffrey calls him Merlin throughout, but he tells us that “rex erat et vates,” and though, as we have seen, he identifies<sup>3</sup> the Merlin of the Vita with the Merlin of the Historia, he surrounds the bard with a group of persons<sup>4</sup> unknown in the earlier work. The Vita can hardly be placed later than 1150; so that the identification of the bard with the enchanter was made at a very early stage of the literary development of the materials, be they legendary or historical, or both.

The first attempt<sup>1</sup> of which we have any record to make a formal distinction between Merlin the enchanter and Merlin the bard is due to Gerald de Barri, better known as Giraldus Cambrensis. In his Cambriae Descriptio,<sup>2</sup> written near the end of the twelfth century, we find the following (cap. xvi.): "Sicut et olim, stante adhuc Britonum regno, gentis excidium, et tam Saxonum primo, quam etiam Normannorum post adventum Merlinus uterque, tam Caledonius quam Ambrosius fertur vaticinando declarasse." After comparing the prophecies of Merlin with those of Scripture, he adds: "Merlini itaque prophetiam legimus, sanctitatem eius vel miracula non legimus. Obiiciunt, et quia prophetiae non extra se fiebant, quando prophetabant, sicut de Merlino Silvestri legitur, quod amens factus propheta-tabat, et de his similiter quasi arreptitiis, de quibus hic locuti sumus."

Also, in the Itinerarium Cambriae, i, 10, he refers to Caermardyn: "Sonat autem Caermardyn, urbs Merlini, eo quod iuxta Britannicam historiam ibi ex incubo genitus, inventus fuerat Merlinus." In ii, 6: "Ea nocte iacuumus apud Nevyn videlicet vigilia paschae floridi; ubi Merlinum Silvestrem diu quaesitum, desideratumque Archidiaconus Menevensis dicitur invenisse."

et ab ipso ibidem invento denominata est Caermerdhn, i.e. urbs Merlini. Alter vero de Albania oriundus, qui et Celidonius dictus est, a Celidonia silva, in qua prophetavit, et Silvester, quia cum inter acies bellicas constitutus, monstrum horribile nimis in aera suscipiendo prospiceret, dementire coepit, et ad silvam transfugiendo silvistrem usque ad obitum vitam perduxit. Hic autem Merlinus tempore Arthuri fuit, et longe plenius et apertius quam alter prophetasse perhibetur.”<sup>1</sup>

In another place<sup>2</sup> Giraldus repeated his distinction between the two Merlins, and remarked that the Caledonian Merlin was much less known than the other, and that it seemed to him worth while to collect and publish whatever information he could find about the man: “Erat itaque Caledonii Silvestris solum haecenus fama percelebris; a Britannicis tamen Bardis, quos poetas vocant, verbo tenus penes plurimos, scripto vero penes paucissimos vaticiniorum eiusdem memoria retenta fuerat.”

Giraldus has some other references to Merlin, of much less importance. From Geoffrey's Historia he takes the account of Merlin's transfer of the great stones from Ireland to Stonehenge. He tells also of the wonderful Lech-lavar or talking-stone, with which vulgar tradition had connected a prophecy of Merlin, but whether of Merlin Ambrosius or Merlin Caledonius we cannot affirm, for the prophecy is not given by Geoffrey.

We must not make too much of negative evidence, but we note in the work of William of Newburgh (b. 1135-6? d. 1200?) an omission that seems a little surprising, if we assume that two Merlins were well known in his day. William of Newburgh criticized very severely Geoffrey's Historia as being full of falsehoods, and especially blamed the lively churchman for introducing the prophecies of Merlin,<sup>1</sup> who was fabled to have had a woman for his mother and a demon incubus for his father. William makes, however, no mention of two Merlins, and seems to know of Merlin Ambrosius only.

Some of the other data at our disposal are not easy to interpret. For instance, in two old lives of St. Patrick—one by Jocelyn, at the end of the twelfth century, and the other doubtfully attributed to Beda—is an account of a certain evil-doer, who, by the prayer of St. Patrick, was mysteriously raised into the air and dashed to the ground a corpse.<sup>2</sup> Jocelyn gives the man the name Melinus, while Beda (?) calls him “mago quodam nomine Locri.” It is, however, by no means certain that our Merlin is here referred to at all. Mere identity of name does not necessarily prove identity of personality.

Ralph de Diceto, who died in the year 1210, mentions Merlin as a bard born of a demon incubus and a king's daughter, who was a nun and lived in the city of Caermarthen. This account, of course, merely follows Geoffrey's Historia.

In the course of the next hundred years no writer seems to have thought the matter worth mentioning; for not until the appearance of Ranulf Higden's Polychronicon, in the first half of the fourteenth century, do we find any further attempt to distinguish the magician of the time of Vortigern from the bard of the sixth century. The doggrel rhyming Latin verses<sup>1</sup> which Higden wrote on Merlinus Ambrosius and Merlinus Caledonius reproduce much of the phraseology of Gerald de Barri, and add really nothing to the solution of the question.<sup>2</sup>

Merlin is referred to by a number of other writers of the Middle Ages. Thus, Sigebertus Gemblacensis<sup>3</sup> mentions a prophecy of Merlin relating to Arthur; and the monk of Malmesbury who wrote the life of Edward III. remarks on the year 1315 that, in consequence of a prophecy of Merlin predicting the recovery of England by King Arthur, the Welsh raised frequent revolts. Merlin is in each case referred to as a well-known name, without any hint of the existence of a second Merlin.

ex Cambria, Merlinus nomine, plura quasi prophetice cecinit ad intelligendum obscura,"<sup>1</sup> etc.

Toward the end of the sixteenth century, Buchanan, in his Scottish history, compares the Merlin of the time of Vortigern with Gildas, somewhat to the disadvantage of the former, and says that Merlin ought rather to be regarded as a great deceiver and a crafty old fellow than as a prophet. Buchanan, like several of the other writers we have examined, seems to know but one Merlin. Yet the distinction made by Giraldus Cambrensis is repeated early in the second half of the sixteenth century in Bale's Illustrium Maioris Britanniae Scriptorum Catalogus,<sup>4</sup> which gives (p. 48) an account of Merlinus Ambrosius, followed by one of Merlinus Caledonius (p. 59).

He then goes on to give an abstract of Geoffrey of Monmouth, and continues: "Aliunde ergo per impostores asseritur eius conceptio, quam ex communi hominum officio et uso, ut facile deciperentur creduli. . . . Dicitur etiam quod suis incantationibus Utherum regem in Gorloidis Cornubiae ducis speciem transformaverit, ut Igernae uxoris potiretur amplexu et quod ex eo scelerato concubitu Arthurum et Annam genuerit; sed de his prudentes iudicent. on Merlin's prophecies was published in 1603; but neither this work nor Freytag's Programma de Merlino Britannico, printed in Naumburg in 1737, brought to light any new material relating to the question now before us. In 1748 Bishop Tanner gave a biography of the two Merlins in the Bibliotheca Britannico-Hibernica<sup>1</sup> (pp. 522-525). Nearly forty years later Bishop Nicolson published, in his English Historical Library<sup>2</sup> (pp. 31, 32), a careful bibliographical account of authorities on English history, and, in characteristically vigorous style, proved to his own satisfaction that all the supposed Merlins were really but one.<sup>3</sup> The rough-and-ready dogmatism of the Bishop failed to carry conviction to Sir Walter Scott; for, in his Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border,<sup>4</sup> he distinguishes Merlin

<sup>3</sup> "Amongst these bards is to be reckoned their famous Merlyn; whose true name (says Humph. Lhuid) is Merdhyn, so called from Caermarthen [Mariduno], where he was born. This was so mighty a Man in his Time that our Writers have thought it convenient to split him into three. The first of these (Godfather to the two following) they call Merlinus Ambrosius or Merdhyn Emrys; who liv'd about the Year 480 and wrote several prophetic Odes, turned into Latin Prose by Jeffrey of Monmouth. The next is Merlinus Caledonius, who liv'd A.D. 570, wrote upon the same Subject with the former, and had the same Translator. The third is surnamed Avalonius, who liv'd under King Malgocunus (they might as well have made him Secretary to Joseph of Arimathea, says our great Stillingfleet); and yet my Author<sup>a</sup> goes gravely on, and affirms that he was an eminent Antiquary, but seems to mix too many Fables with his true story. They write this last, indeed, Melchius, Melkinus, and Merwinus, and make him to live some time before the latter Merlyn. But this is all stuff, and he is manifestly the same Man or nothing. The most learned of the British Antiquaries agree that this Myrdhyn ap Morvryn (call'd from the country he lived in Caledonius, and Sylvestris from his Humour of leading a retired life in the woods) wrote a Poem called Avallenau, or the Apple-Trees, to his Lord Gwendholen ap Keidio; who was slain at the Battle of Arderith, in the Year 577. Some Fragments of this Poem were found at Hengwryt, in Meirionydshire, by Mr. Lhwyd; who long since observed to me that from hence the Poet himself got the surname of Avalloni. If so, there's a happy Discovery made of one of the many foolish Impostures of the old Monks of Glassenbury: Who, to secure this famous Prophet to themselves, have made King Arthur's Tomb and their own Monastery to stand in Insula Avallonia. Soon after him came Ambrosius Thaliessin, whom Bale and Pits make to live in the Days of King Arthur, and to record his story."

the Wild from Ambrose Merlin, and to the former attributes the Scottish prophecies.

Sixteen years later, in 1849, Thomas Stephens, in his Literature of the Kymry (p. 208 sqq.), reaffirmed the identity of Merlin Caledonius with Merlin Ambrosius. His argument, in brief, is as follows:—Nennius represents Myrddin Emrys as a child who appears before King Vortigern, about 480 A.D. On the other hand, the Myrddin ab Morvryn of the Welsh poems is an old man who, about 570 A.D., is the brother-in-law of Rhydderch Hael, one of the three victorious princes in the battle of Ardudd.<sup>1</sup> In order to affirm the identity of the two prophets, we must assume an age of more than ninety years; but this was not exceptional in Wales. Then we have the striking fact that the two prophets lived in North Wales and North England—districts not widely separated—and that their prophecies show considerable similarity. Furthermore, the bards of the twelfth century and later took the prophecies of Merlin Ambrosius, as given by Geoffrey of Monmouth, and let them reappear as prophecies of the Caledonian Merlin, thus showing that the two bards were held to be identical. This conclusion was natural enough, for the father of the Caledonian Merlin was known, while the traditional Myrddin Emrys was a child without a father, and seemed therefore less real than the bard whose father was named.

San-Marte seems to adopt the view of Stephens, for he concludes his summary of Stephens' argument in these words: "Und so gelangt Stephens zu dem wohlmotivirten Resultat, dass Merddin Emrys und Merddin ap Morvryn, Wyllt und Silvester, wie Merlin der Barde, Zauberer, und Prophet nur verschiedne Namen für eine und dieselbe Person seien."<sup>2</sup>

A different conclusion was reached by the French critic Villemarqué. He regarded Merlin Ambrosius as a historical personage, associated as a bard with King Aurelius Ambrosius.

By a singular series of etymological guesses, Villemarqué tried to establish a connection between the Breton Marzin and the Latin Marsus, son of Circe. Although he held that Myrddin the Welsh bard had really lived, he would not affirm that any of the poems attributed to him are genuine.

For several years after the appearance of M. de la Villemarqué's theory the only critic of note who touched on the Merlin problem was Mr. D. W. Nash.<sup>1</sup> His theory rejects altogether the view of Mr. Stephens and others, who hold that the "Merddin Emrys of Vortigern and Merddin the son of Morvryn must be taken to have been one and the same person, and that the latter is the one whose character formed the nucleus from which the other was developed." "Merddin Emrys" (Merlin Ambrosius) has in Nash's view no claim to be regarded as a historical character. To use again his words: "We ought, I think, to look upon the figure of the great enchanter as a pure work of fiction woven in with the historical threads which belong to this epoch of the Saxon wars in Britain."<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, he adds: "So far from being of unknown or mysterious birth, the pedigree of Merddin Caledonius is as well ascertained as that of any other British celebrity."<sup>3</sup>

Mr. Skene did not discuss this specific question in the Four Ancient Books of Wales,<sup>4</sup> but he established more firmly than before the historical character of a Welsh bard bearing the name of Myrddin.

The conclusion arrived at by Stephens, in his Literature of the Kymry, that Merlin Ambrosius, Merlyn Sylvester, and Merlin Caledonius were one and the same person, was adopted by M. Paulin Paris in his Romans de la Table Ronde (i. p. 80).<sup>5</sup>

His son, M. Gaston Paris, though less pronounced, seems to hold essentially the same opinion.<sup>1</sup>

The last critic that I shall cite, Mr. H. L. D. Ward,<sup>2</sup> regards the Merlin who was brought before Vortigern as purely legendary and mythical; while the Myrddin of the Welsh poems is historical, and is to be assigned to the latter part of the sixth century and the beginning of the seventh. In a paper published in the Romania<sup>3</sup> for 1893, pp. 504-526, Mr. Ward proves that a wild man of the name of Lailoken,<sup>4</sup> who lived in the time of St. Kentigern, is to be identified with Merlin Silvester, otherwise known as Merlin the Wild or Merlinus Caledonius. This wild man one day meets St. Kentigern and begs the good man to listen to him. Then he goes on to accuse himself of being the cause of the death of all those who were slain in the battle "inter surnommé Ambrosius, celui-là Sylvester ou le Sauvage. L'Historia Britonum a parlé du premier, et la Vita Merlini du second. Je donnerai bientôt l'explication de tous ces doubles personnages de la tradition bretonne: mais il sera surtout facile de prouver à ceux qui suivront le progrès de la légende de Merlin que l'Ambrosius le Sylvester et le Caledonius (car les Écossais ont aussi réclamé leur Merlin topique) ne sont qu'une seule et même personne."

Lidel et Carwonnok," i.e. the battle of Arderydd (A.D. 573). A variety of detail establishes the essential identity of Lailoken with the Myrddin of the Avallenau. Moreover, a considerable part of the account of Lailoken is very like what we find in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Vita Merlini. Now, as we can hardly assume that the writer of the life of St. Kentigern invented the story out of nothing, we must believe that he used earlier material accessible as an oral tradition or in the form of a written narrative in prose or verse. The date (1164) of the oldest version of the life of Kentigern is, however, only about sixteen years later than that assigned to the Vita Merlini. Evidently, then, Geoffrey of Monmouth obtained access in some way to a life of St. Kentigern, with the accompanying account of Lailoken, and incorporated such features as served his purpose into his Vita Merlini. The variations in his poem from the story as it appears in the prose versions are what we might expect from a writer of Geoffrey's lively invention. The style of the earliest prose version, published by Mr. Ward in his article, suggests a Celtic origin.<sup>1</sup> Hence we may not improbably suppose that if Geoffrey's source was an oral tradition, he may have learned the story from some Welshman. The fact of chief interest, the identification of the historic Myrddin with Merlin Ambrosius, is brought out clearly by Mr. Ward.

"People had certainly begun to identify Lailoken [Myrddin or Merlin Silvester] with Merlin [Ambrosius] when the narrative in Titus A. xix. was written. It says of him: 'qui Lailoken vocabatur quem quidam dicunt fuisse Merlinum, qui erat Britonibus quasi propheta singularis, sed nescitur.' Again, Lailoken utters that prophecy about a triple death (in this case told of himself), which we regard as essentially Merlinesque, because we know it well in the French romance. And lastly, at the end of Part II., when it has been told

Merlinus triplicem fertur inisse necem.'

In all other respects, Lailoken is very different indeed from the semi-daemon who attaches himself to the early kings of Britain. Kentigern describes him as a mere man, subject to cold and hunger, and liable to death. He is much more a madman than a prophet. He can never make the same statement twice over. No one pays much heed to his words until he has died the triple death he had prophesied ; and then a few of his other strange sayings are recalled to mind." (p. 512.)

The most instructive lesson to be drawn from this long discussion is the diametrical opposition in opinion of those who have studied the question most carefully. The materials are, in my judgment, too scanty to allow us to affirm or to deny absolutely the existence of an earlier as well as a later Merlin. If the story of the boy without a father be a myth, we may yet suppose that the myth enclosed some small kernel of truth, even though we may not hope to discover what the exact truth is. If we adopt Mr. Skene's opinion, and assign the Chronicle of Nennius (or portions of it) to the seventh century, or take the more common view which refers it to the ninth century, we may well suppose the author to have been conversant with British traditions relating to the bard Myrddin. If the whole early account of the Enchanter Merlin be legendary, we have nothing to prove that the legend<sup>1</sup> existed as a whole before the birth of the historical Myrddin of the sixth century. If it be a later growth than the time of the real Myrddin, we need have no more difficulty with the mythical features than we have with the mythical Charlemagne

My own belief is, that the only really historical personage is the Welsh bard Myrddin, while the Merlin of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Vita Merlini is, as we have seen, the same personage with the addition of confusing details borrowed from the life of Merlin Ambrosius. I also incline to think that Merlin Ambrosius is for the most part legendary, but that what we actually know of him can scarcely be more uncertain. As for his name, Geoffrey borrowed the name Ambrosius from Nennius, and Merlin (Myrddin) from Welsh tradition. A slight amount of actual prophetic Welsh tradition, added to a much larger amount of prophecy concocted by Geoffrey himself, made up the book of Merlin's prophecies. I hardly think that Geoffrey of Monmouth knew at first-hand the Welsh poems which have come down to us. If he did, the use he made of them was exceedingly slight. On the other hand, if we suppose him to have got his acquaintance with Welsh legend mainly through oral tradition, we have little difficulty in accounting for the genesis of Merlin Ambrosius, and for the confusion of the two prophets in the Vita Merlini. We may suppose Geoffrey at first to have known vaguely of a Welsh bard or prophet, and to have heard the name of Merlin (Myrddin) connected with the story of a boy without a father. These slight hints were all that his active mind needed to enable him to string together the materials which floating tradition and his own imagination furnished him. Such, at any rate, is the conclusion gradually forced upon me in the progress of this investigation, but I should be glad to abandon this theory for one better grounded.

The question, then, stands very nearly where it did when we started; and it need not detain us much longer. We have found that Geoffrey of Monmouth was the first or among the first to assert the identity of Merlin Ambrosius with Merlin (Myrddin) the Caledonian, and that Giraldus Cambrensis was the first to assert explicitly that Merlin Ambrosius was not the same as Merlin the Caledonian. Since the time of Giraldus we have discovered no important materials (unknown in his day), while we have probably lost much then extant; so that, in spite of our more critical methods, we can scarcely do more than to balance probabilities and to confess our ignorance. As for the Welsh poems, it appears probable that at least portions may be referred to the sixth century, and that a Welsh bard of the name of Myrddin actually existed. In the interval between the death of Myrddin and the time when the short chronicle of Nennius was committed to writing a tradition had arisen of a wonderful diviner. This tradition may have owed something to floating tales concerning Myrddin, even though his name may not have been uniformly associated with them all. During this intermediate stage of development the mythical element was first introduced, but how long the mythical features had existed cannot be definitely fixed. Yet we may be well-nigh certain that the essentially oriental motive in the story of the boy whose blood was to be sprinkled on the foundations of Vortigern's tower did not originate with Nennius. Exactly what is the origin of all the other features we may hardly presume to guess, but that some are Celtic seems not unlikely.

Of one thing, however, we may be certain: the Merlin of the French romances owed nothing directly to the Welsh poems that have come down to us, though floating Celtic legend contributed more than one striking element to the great prose cycle—notably the story of Nymiane. We must not expect perfect unity in the conception of the French romancers. In all probability the romancers had no critical knowledge of the legend, and would not have cared a straw whether their accounts of Merlin were confused or not. They contentedly jumbled together elements which were perfect strangers to one another before they were violently incorporated into the original story. Throughout the romances we have no hint that more than one Merlin was known, so that, whether invention played a large part or not, we find a multitude of incidents bearing no analogy whatever to the known facts of the life of the Bard Myrddin. If, therefore, we assume two Merlins, we must admit that with one of them the French romances have little or nothing to do; if we assume but one Merlin (Myrddin), we must admit that his features have been altered almost beyond recognition. Confused the portrait of Merlin in the romances certainly is, in the sense that it groups together elements of very diverse character; but the portrait is not unharmonious, and by the very multiplicity of details it seems far more real to us than the shadowy figure outlined by the Welsh bards.

NOTES ON THE SOURCES.

We are now prepared to look a little farther, and to trace some of the materials of which the romance is composed. The ultimate source of many of the incidents is sufficiently obscure; but of the romance as a whole we may say that it is a French superstructure, reared upon a Celtic foundation according to plans supplied by Geoffrey of Monmouth, but greatly modified by Robert de Borron and later romancers.

The setting of the story in the French romance is very different from that in Geoffrey of Monmouth; for in Robert de Borron's tale Merlin is the chief character, instead of the subordinate figure that we see in Geoffrey's Historia. Hence we find the romancer continually adding traits and incidents of which there is no hint in Nennius or Geoffrey. It is evident, therefore, that we cannot account for every line and paragraph, but that we must regard considerable portions as pure invention. The first six chapters of the French romance contain much material essentially the same as portions of Geoffrey's Historia. But this matter Robert probably got at second-hand, for there is no reason to think that he knew any language but his own. Yet we may well suppose that Robert was familiar, at least at second-hand, with floating Celtic tradition, and that he picked up from the lips of wandering singers and story-tellers more than one of the details of his romance. Some legends would unquestionably have come to his ears in that story-telling age; but just which of his materials were so derived is a matter of conjecture. Gaston Paris has argued strongly against Robert's familiarity with Latin,<sup>1</sup> and has urged that he got the leading features of the legend more or less directly from Wace<sup>2</sup> or other French translators of Geoffrey, and modified the outline according to his fading recollection of minor details, piecing out the story with his own inventions.

The following notes on the leading incidents make no pretence to be exhaustive, and they take little account of minor variations from Wace and Geoffrey of Monmouth.<sup>3</sup>

THE MERLIN OF ROBERT DE BORRON.

1. Council of Demons (p. 1).

This was probably suggested by the Gospel of Nicodemus (chap. xvii.), which had been turned into French verse before Robert de Borron wrote.<sup>1</sup>

2. Begetting of a Child by the agency of a Demon<sup>2</sup> (p. 3).

This incident in its simple form is found in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Reg. Brit. vi. 18; Wace, Brut, ll. 7623-7644. The belief in the existence of incubi seems to have been very general in the Middle Ages. Geoffrey himself refers to Apuleius, who gives a very singular account of the Demon of Socrates in the Liber de deo Socratis, but Apuleius has nothing to say of incubi. St. Augustine, in De Civitate Dei, xv. 23, mentions incubi under the name dusii or drusii—

<sup>2</sup> Cf. G. Paris, Merlin, Introd. p. 13; and Drayton's Polyolbion, Works, vol. ii. p. 763 (note by Selden): “I shall not believe that other than true bodies on bodies can generate, except by swiftness of motion in conveying of stolen seed some unclean spirit might arrogate the improper name of generation.” Cf. also Alf. Maury, La Magie et l'Astrologie au Moyen Âge, p. 189, where the deuce is discussed. Very curious information on the entire subject of demons may be found in Jean Bodin's Demonomanie, Paris, 1580, and in Joh. Wier's De Praestigiis daemonum et incantationibus ac veneficiis, Basel, 1563.

When, in the course of the Middle Ages, the belief grew up that Antichrist<sup>1</sup> was to be born of a devil and a virgin, just as Christ was born of the Holy Ghost and a virgin, we see that the essential elements of the story, as we find it in the romance, were already at hand.<sup>2</sup>

Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy, Part III. sec. 2, mem. i. subs. 1, gives a considerable discussion of the intercourse of the Devil with women. For several other references see Dunlop's Hist. of Fiction (1888), i. p. 146, note; i. p. 156, note; ii. pp. 461, 462; Du Cange, Glossarium, art. Incubi; Tylor, Primitive Culture, i. pp. 189 and 193.

We may incidentally note that when Merlin reaches the age of twelve months he is uttering wise sayings. In the romance of Kyng Alisaunder (Morley's English Writers, iii. p. 297) we read of women in the East who bear but one child in their lives. "This child is able to begin talking to its mother as soon as it is born."

5. The Hermit Blase (p. 23).

Blase may be a mere invention, but Kölbing calls attention<sup>1</sup> to three passages in Lazamon's Brut, where a hermit is mentioned whom Merlin knows and visits. Lazamon translated (c. 1200) Wace, and made some additions, due in part, it may be, to oral tradition. Robert de Borron, of course, knew nothing of Lazamon, but the two writers might easily have stumbled upon the same popular story, preserved as a local tradition in more detail in one district than in another.<sup>2</sup>

M. Gaster has shown that there are curious parallels between the early history of Merlin and several Jewish legends relating to the building of Solomon's Temple, which are told of Ashmedai and Ben Sira, and that these legends are at least as old as the eighth or ninth century.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Scott F. Surtees, in a short study on Merlin and Arthur (E.E.T.S., 1871), identifies Blase with Lupus, but his theory is badly reasoned out. He even identifies Merlin with Germanus (see also p. xc., ante). We may admit that certain elements are borrowed from the lives of Lupus and Germanus without assuming identity. Paulin Paris thinks that Blase was introduced as a sort of excuse for the inventions of the romancer, and compares the hermit with the false Dares, Callisthenes, Turpin, etc.—Romans de la Table Ronde, ii. 32, 33.

<sup>3</sup> Kölbing, Altenglische Bibl. iv. p. cvi. Mr. Ward, of the British Museum, in calling my attention in conversation (April 22, 1890) to this same matter, suggested that the similarity of incident is not due to borrowing, but rather to the fact that the conception had become common property. As early as 1836, F. Michel, Vita Merlini (Introd. p. lxxi.) pointed out the oriental element in this

8. Merlin's bursts of Laughter on going to Vortigern (pp. 33, 34).

Geoffrey of Monmouth, Vita Merlini, ll. 490-532.

The setting of these two incidents is, of course, very different in the prose romance and in the Vita Merlini. In the poem, Merlin laughs at a beggar who has a concealed treasure, and at a young fellow with a pair of new shoes, who will soon be drowned. The incident of the shoes appears to have been a widely diffused mediaeval legend; and there is good ground for thinking that Robert de Borron did not get it from the Vita Merlini.

Without insisting on Robert's ignorance of Latin, we may note that there are in the Vita Merlini two instances of Merlin's knowledge, which, as G. Paris remarks,<sup>1</sup> are not less piquant than those here given, and which we might, perhaps, expect Robert to reproduce, but with which he seems not to have been acquainted. The evidence is, however, negative, and should not be pressed too far. Gaston Paris refers to the Hebrew legend of the Talmud, and calls attention to the similarity of the story related of the demon Ashmedai, who was brought before Solomon.<sup>2</sup> incident as found in "The History of the Temple of Jerusalem"—translated from the Arabic MS. of Imam Jalal-Addin al Si'uti, with notes and dissertations, by the Rev. James Reynolds, B.A.Lond., 1836, 8vo. Here, too, is a parallel to Merlin's bursts of laughter.

<sup>2</sup> For a further account of the history of this legend, see M. Gaster's Jewish Sources of and Parallels to the Early English Metrical Legends of King Arthur and Merlin, Lond., 1887. Gaster also gives (Feuilleton-Zeitung, No. 299, Berlin, March 26, 1890) a Rumanian legend (quoted by Kölbing) of the Archangel Gabriel and a hermit, in which the same motive recurs. Kölbing points out that the Italian version of Merlin varies somewhat the account of the churl and the shoes. Altenglische Bibl. iv. p. cxi. note.

Wace omits the interpretation by Geoffrey of Monmouth, though he gives the prediction of the death of Vortigern. The interpretation in the prose romance of Merlin is different from that in Geoffrey's Historia. For instance, in Geoffrey's account the red dragon betokens the British nation, while the white dragon denotes the Saxons. In the romance the red dragon signifies Vortigern, and the white dragon typifies the two sons of Constance. As Robert de Borron cannot have got his interpretation from either Geoffrey or Wace, he must have either invented it or had access to oral or written sources unknown to us.<sup>3</sup>

The Merlin strangely confuses the original account. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth, the three sons of Constantine were Constance, who became a monk, Aurelius, and Uter-Pendragon; while in the romance we read (p. 24) of a king Constance who

Vita Merlini, ll. 310-321 ; ll. 391-417.

In the Vita it is a page whose death is prophesied, and it is the queen who disguises him as a woman. G. Paris suggests<sup>2</sup> that Robert de Borron probably got the story indirectly. The different setting seems due to Robert's own invention.

The circumstances and the purpose are very different in the romance from what is related in the earlier accounts. In Geoffrey's Historia the stones are brought over because of their healing properties while Aurelius is living. In the romance Uter sets them up on Salisbury Plain as a monument to his brother Pendragon.<sup>3</sup>

As already remarked, no allusion to the Round Table is made by Geoffrey, though there is reason to suppose that the legend is much older than his Historia.<sup>4</sup> In the references to the Round Table in the Merlin there is some confusion.<sup>5</sup> Wace tells us Arthur founded the Round Table; while the Merlin (p. 60) says that it was founded by Uter-Pendragon.<sup>1</sup> Merlin tells the king the story of the table at which Christ had sat, and of the table which Joseph of Arimathea was commanded to make. The third was to be established by the king in the name of the Trinity, and was to have a void place for the knight yet unborn who should bring to an end the adventures of the Holy Grail. This is one of the not infrequent points of contact in our romance of the Grail legends and those of Merlin, though, of course, originally independent.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>3</sup> G. Paris remarks that Wace omits the name Gorlois, and that Robert de Borron does the same. Yet Wace at least once mentions Gorlois under the name—"Gornois un quens Cornvalois," l. 8689; "Li quens de Cornuaille," l. 8798; "Que li quens a de Cornuaille," l. 8937. Robert of Brunne, translating Wace, does the same:

for pointing them out. The ultimate source of this story is difficult to determine. It has been compared with the story of David and Uriah, and with the tale of Amphitryon in Ovid.<sup>1</sup> Possibly Geoffrey's biblical or classical reading helped him to a hint; but not improbably the underlying idea had become common property, and need not be referred to any definite source.

As for the frequent metamorphoses of Merlin throughout the romance, they are not essentially different from the metamorphoses of the old mythologies—Proteus, Vertumnus, etc. We need not, therefore, take especial account of the passages where Merlin appears as a blind cripple (p. 73), etc. But we may note that transformations of all sorts are very common in Celtic stories.<sup>2</sup>

Of course the details of the battles differ in the romance, and in Geoffrey and Wace; but it is a little remarkable that Robert tells us that Pendragon (who in the romance takes the place of the Aurelius Ambrosius of Geoffrey) was killed in the battle of Salisbury (p. 56), while Geoffrey (viii. 14), as well as Wace, says that Pendragon was poisoned, and that Uter afterwards met a similar fate (viii. 24). Our romance has no account of the poisoning, and agrees with Geoffrey (viii. 22) and Wace only in making Uter suffer a long illness, so that he has to be borne in a horse-litter.

We are not obliged to suppose the dragon standard of Uter the invention of the romancer. Such a standard was used in war by the Dacians and by the Roman emperors after Constantine. A dragon was the standard of Wessex; so, too, in the public processions of the Pope, the image of a dragon under the cross was borne at the end of a lance by Draconarii, a name also given to the bearers of the dragon banner of the Roman emperors.<sup>1</sup>

16. Coronation of Arthur<sup>2</sup> (pp. 95-107).

Geoffrey (Hist. ix. 1) and his translator Wace agree in their account of the boy Arthur. The crown is set upon his head by the Archbishop Dubricius<sup>3</sup> at the request of the nobles, because of the increasing numbers of the Saxons. The birth of Arthur (viii. 20) is no mystery. In the romance, on the other hand, the barons know nothing of Arthur till he takes the sword out of the anvil in the presence of the people. This incident of the sword is referred by G. Paris<sup>4</sup> to biblical legends; and it recurs in various forms in the literature of the Middle Ages.

<sup>3</sup> In the English prose version the name of the archbishop is not given, though in Arthur and Merlin (ed. Kölbing), l. 2783, we find "bishop Brice" mentioned, and I have found the name in several of the French MSS. of the prose Merlin. In Geoffrey's Historia it appears, viii. 12; ix. 1, 4, 12, 13, 15.

Paris, Romans, v. p. 330. In Kyng Alisaunder, l. 2625 sqq., the prince draws out of the ground a spear. Cf. Kölbing, Altenglische Bibl. p. lxi. In the Völsunga Saga, cap. iii., Sigmund, son of King Völsung, pulls out of the Branstock the sword at which all others had vainly tugged, and wins it for himself. This sword was the gift of Odin. ## THE BOOK OF ARTHUR.

We have seen in our examination of the manuscripts that there are several continuations of the original romance of Robert de Borron. One of these continuations is the basis of the second part (pp. 108-699) of our English translation. It remains to discuss briefly the sources of this continuation—the so-called Book of Arthur.<sup>1</sup> The study of the manuscripts has thrown light on the way in which the romance was built up piece by piece, but of the origin of the materials the manuscripts tell us nothing.

The study of the sources belongs rather to French scholars than to English; for the investigation demands a minute comparison of the other French Arthurian romances yet unpublished. A large number of questions, too, must be relegated to the Celtic philologist, who must determine the origin of the various groups of personal and local names. Numerous special investigations, with the help of critical texts, must precede the solution of these and other problems. But we must not overlook the fact that many of the elements of the continuation are invented, or at least selected from the common stock of material that lay ready for any romancer who chose to use it, and can be traced to no definite source. Padding of this sort we may pass by without extended remark. In our discussion we can perhaps best take up the chapters in their order, and bestow a few words on the sources of the leading incidents. The great extent of the romance forbids us to touch any but the more important matters, and those only lightly. In many instances the notes scarcely attempt more than to indicate what the questions are.

<sup>1</sup> The author (or authors) of the Book of Arthur is unknown. Paulin Paris suggests that he may be the same as the writer of the Saint-Graal; but this is a mere conjecture.

The short narrative of Robert de Borron had utilized nearly all that the literature before his time had to tell of the wonder-working Merlin; but the story had quickened the invention of more than one writer. In the recital of Geoffrey of Monmouth, Merlin disappears from view after the adventure of Uter and Ygerne.<sup>1</sup> Robert makes Merlin figure also at the coronation of Arthur.

But after the conception of a diviner and magician was once given, nothing was easier for the romancers who continued Robert's work than to introduce Merlin at all suitable emergencies into the further history of Arthur. This plan involved piecing together in confusing and almost overwhelming detail a congeries of legends and recitals which must have been originally distinct, and in their elements far earlier than the time when the romance was written. Yet out of the confusion stands the outline of a few great events. The rough sketch is furnished by Geoffrey's Historia, but in the hands of the romancers this is expanded both by free invention and the insertion of borrowed legends.<sup>2</sup> In the continuation we trace the several narratives running at times side by side, but separate, and at other times tangled together:—

1. The revolt of the seven kings occupies a considerable portion of the romance (pp. 108-599).

2. The wars with the Saxons, which had already begun in the time of Uter, are directed against both Arthur and the kings revolted from him, and ultimately compel the rebels to make common cause with Arthur.

<sup>2</sup> Omissions and changes of all sorts occur. In Geoffrey (ix. 1) there is no revolt against Arthur immediately after his coronation. Hoel of Armorica sends help to Arthur against the Saxons (ix. 2). Cheldrie is not mentioned in the romance. In Geoffrey (ix. 9) Lot, Urian, and Augusel are brothers. Guanhamara is of Roman descent, and educated under Duke Cador. Arthur's remote conquests (ix. 10, 11) are not reproduced in the romance. Arthur's marriage (ix. 9) occurs in Geoffrey after the defeat of the Saxons, and his coronation after the war with the Romans.

3. The war of King Leodegan with King Rion, and the marriage of Arthur with Gonnore, are more or less of a break in the continuity of the narrative; though, where all is so loosely put together, one may hesitate to determine what is principal and what subordinate.

4. The war with the Romans (p. 639 sqq.) is merely supplementary, and not strictly an integral part of the narrative.

5. Along with these larger divisions of the narrative are legends of Merlin, of Nimiane, of Gawain, and others. A slight attempt at unity is made by introducing at intervals the hermit Blase, to whom Merlin relates all that has happened; but this device is crude, and has no advantage further than that it allows Merlin now and then to recapitulate a portion of the story.

CHAPTER VII.

This chapter appears to be for the most part a patchwork of commonplace incidents, though many of the materials are old. The thought of holding a grand court after Arthur's coronation is evidently borrowed, with much modification, from Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia, ix. 12. But Geoffrey says that Arthur held his court at Pentecost, while the romance (p. 108) places it after the middle of August. On the other hand, Robert de Borron<sup>1</sup> agrees with Geoffrey in making the coronation occur at Pentecost. Of the names here introduced, three at least are taken from Geoffrey, viz. Loth, Urien, Aguysas, though with slight changes of form. Prof. Rhys points out<sup>2</sup> that these and other names here found are Celtic. Urien is the subject of eight poems in the Book of Taliessin.<sup>3</sup> Ventres (Nentre of Garlot),<sup>4</sup> Ydiers

In Geoffrey's account there is no revolt, but the rebellion is naturally enough suggested by the circumstances of Arthur's birth as detailed in the Merlin of Robert de Borron, and could be easily invented with the attendant features. Apart from the references to King Leodegan and his war with King Rion, to both of whom we shall recur later, the remainder of the chapter is taken up with the commonplace description of a battle of the Middle Ages. The dragon standard has already been commented upon.

CHAPTER VIII.

This chapter is occupied with the mission of Ulfin and Bretel to King Ban and King Bors. We have a résumé (p. 121) of a part of Robert de Borron's Merlin, and an account of the children of Ygerne, different from that given on p. 86 of the romance.

On turning to Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia, ix. 2, we learn that ambassadors are sent into Armorica to get the help of King Hoel, Arthur's sister's son, against the Saxons; and he provides 15,000 men. In the romance, Ulfin and Bretel, who had already figured in Robert de Borron's Merlin, go to Armorica (or Little Britain) for the help of King Ban of Benoyk<sup>2</sup> and King Bors of Gannes. These are both identified<sup>3</sup> by Prof. Rhys with characters in Celtic literature. "The identity of Ban or Pan with Uthr Ben or Uthr Pen-dragon is shown by his name, and the story of his dying immediately after drinking from a certain well (p. 127). This has its counterpart in Geoffrey's account (viii. 24) of Uthr Pendragon's death in consequence of his foes having poisoned the well he was wont to drink from. Thus Bors readily falls into his place as Ambrosius or Emrys, brother to Uthr Ben, especially as the two are described by Geoffrey as exiles in France, whence they are invited to come over to take possession of this country against Vortigern and his allies. But under the name Ambrosius or Emrys were confounded the historical Aurelius Ambrosius and the mythic Merlin Ambrosius, in whom we appear to have the Celtic Zeus in one of his many forms." Bors is "the same person called Bort in the Welsh Triads, for, besides the similarity of the name, Bors, like Bort, was one of those who found the Holy Grail."<sup>1</sup> Ban and Bors are warred upon in their own realm by King Claudas de la deserte, in whom Paulin Paris<sup>2</sup> thought he could recognize Clovis, King of the Franks, or Clotaire I., his successor. "Nam Britanni sub Francorum potestate fuerunt post obitum regis Chlodowei, et comites non reges appellati sunt." (Greg. Tur. iv. 3, A.D. 549.)

The other incidents of the chapter relate to the adventures of Ulfín and Bretel, and are plainly invented.

CHAPTER IX.

1. Most of this chapter appears to demand no especial source, as it is largely taken up with the details of Arthur's first great tournament; but there seems little reason to doubt that the original suggestion of this feature came from Geoffrey's Historia, ix. 13, 14.

2. The interesting detail with regard to Kay that he was hated because of his surly tongue, and that this was due to his having been nursed by a woman of lower rank than his mother (p. 135), is shown by Gaston Paris to point to a widespread superstition of the Middle Ages.<sup>1</sup>

3. Towards the end of the chapter, Guynebans, the brother of Ban and Bors, is mentioned (pp. 138–140) as a great clerk whom Merlin teaches many things. What use the young fellow makes of his knowledge we shall see later (Merlin, p. 361). Now in Geoffrey's Historia, v. 16, a certain Guanius joins with Melga in slaying Ursula and the eleven thousand virgins. According to Rhys,<sup>2</sup> "The Welsh versions usually have Melwas and Gwynwas: it is the latter name also, probably, that meets us in Malory's Gwinas, i. 15, and Gwenbaus, brother to Ban and Bors, i. 11."

4. At the end of this chapter we have the words (p. 131)—
 "But now cesseth the tale of hem, and returneth to speke of kyng Arthur, that is lefte at Logres." This is one of the very numerous instances in the second branch of the Merlin of this kind of transition. Paulin Paris finds<sup>3</sup> in these laisses an additional proof of the dual authorship of the romance, for nothing of the sort appears in the prose redaction of the Joseph of Arimathea or in the first branch of the Merlin, although so common in the second branch (pp. 108–699) and in the Saint-Graal.

CHAPTER X.

1. The greater portion of the details of the battle of Bredigan is, of course, pure invention, though the legend of the battle itself may have some more substantial basis. This battle parallels the earlier one of Arthur with the rebel kings.<sup>4</sup>

2. The entrusting of a ring to Merlin, which he is to show as a token to Leonces de Paerne (p. 143), is a very familiar motive, much older than the romance.

3. Merlin's account of King Rion and of Leodegan and his daughter Gonnore (p. 114) is repeated (p. 141) in much the same terms, with some additional touches. The discussion of this matter, however, belongs more properly to chap. xiv., and later.

CHAPTER XI.

For the two chief incidents here detailed I can cite no specific source. The transformations of Merlin may be compared with those recounted by Geoffrey of Monmouth. The poetic glamour in the story of the great churl coming through the meadows, with his bow and arrows, and his coat and hood of russet, seems to suggest some other source than the invention of the French romancer, but I have hit upon nothing precisely the same. Cf. Malory's Morte Darthur, book i. chap. xvii.

CHAPTERS XII, XIII.

1. In these chapters we have a prolix account of the return of the Saxons, and of their ravages in Britain. Much of the geography is fantastic, and cannot be explained. But several of the place-names, though strangely disguised, probably represent actual localities.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> I cannot take space for details, but refer the reader to Prof. Rhys's Studies in the Arthurian Legend, Index. See also J. S. Stuart Glennie's Essay on Arthurian Localities (E.E.T.S. No. 36), and the index of place-names to Malory's Morte Darthur (ed. Sommer), vol. ii. The conclusion of P. Paris on this matter is as follows: "Tout ce qu'on peut donc assurer, c'est que la scène des récits qui touchent à la France embrasse la Touraine, l'Anjou, la Poitou, la Marche, la Bretagne, une partie de l'Auvergne, et de la basse Bourgogne" (Romans, ii. 111). Trebes is Trèves, on the borders of Benoyk and Berry. Benoyk is Vannes. "La terre deserte est le Berry, dont la capitale est Bourges et le roi Claudas" (ii. 110, 111). Cf. also Dunlop's Hist. of Fiction (1888), i. 198, note.

2. The account of the begetting of Mordred (pp. 180, 181) is variously told in the romances,<sup>1</sup> and in Geoffrey's Historia, ix. 9. Geoffrey calls him Arthur's nephew and Lot's son, and seems to know nothing of Arthur's incest with his sister. But the basis of the whole story of Mordred is certainly Celtic, and this ugly feature is doubtless a part of the original myth.<sup>2</sup>

3. The account of Gawain's conversation with his mother (p. 185 sqq.) may be compared with that of Ewein and his mother (p. 241), the second being evidently a mere variant of the first. The singular detail with regard to the waxing and waning of Gawain's strength (p. 182) is touched upon by Prof. Rhys,<sup>3</sup> who finds in it evidence for regarding Gawain as a solar hero.

4. The enchantress Carnile, who is here mentioned (p. 185) along with Morgain and Nimiane, is evidently to be referred to the same mythical sources with them.

CHAPTER XIV.

1. The entire story of the relations of Arthur with Gonnore has been greatly embellished by the romancers, with the result that no two accounts precisely agree. In Geoffrey's Historia there are but three references to Guanhumara, and of these the first only (ix. 9) is important for our immediate purpose. There she is said to have belonged to a noble Roman family, to have been educated under Duke Cadur, and to have excelled in beauty all other women in the island. Geoffrey's whole account of Guanhumara tallies hardly at all with the account in the Book of Arthur and in the other romances, to say nothing of the Celtic sources.<sup>1</sup>

2. As for Leodegan, I can throw no light on the origin of the story of his wars with Rion. Malory touches lightly upon Leodegan (i. 17, 18; iii. 1), but tells us little about the conflicts with Rion. Still, both Leodegan and Rion play too large a part in the romances to allow us to count them as mere figments of the imagination. With Rion is connected the old story of the mantle fringed with beards. The essential outlines of this incident are found in Geoffrey's Historia, x. 3, where Arthur, after overcoming the giant of Mt. St. Michel, says that he had found none so strong since he had killed the giant Ritho on Mt. Aravius. In our romance (p. 649) we read that "neuer hadde thei seyn so grete a feende," and on p. 649 we find no mention of Ritho. Malory also omits the name, and makes Arthur say: "This was the fyerst gyaunt that euer I mette with / saue one in the mount of Arabe / whiche I ouercame / but this was gretter and fyrseser" (Le Morte Darthur, v. 5).

Ritho had made furs for himself of the beards of the kings he had killed, and he offered to give Arthur's beard the most prominent place. We have in our romance two accounts<sup>2</sup> of this mantle, with characteristic differences. In the first (p. 115), we are told that Rion had conquered twenty crowned kings, and made a mantle of their beards, and that he had sworn not to cease till he had conquered thirty kings. According to the second account (pp. 619, 620), he had flayed off the beards of nine kings, and he now wanted Arthur's beard for the tassels. In Geoffrey, Ritho is a giant; and in our romance Rion is called "kyng of the londe of Geauntes and of the londe of pastures" (p. 114). Later, he is called king of Ireland (pp. 175, 208); king of Denmark and Ireland (p. 228); king of "Denmarke and Islonde" (p. 327); king of the Isles (p. 619); and lord of all the west (p. 620).

In the romance of Arthur, as outlined by Dunlop (Hist. of Fiction, 1888, vol. i. p. 224), we read that Laodogant "had been attacked by King Ryon, a man of a disposition so malevolent that he had formed to himself a project of possessing a mantle furred with the beards of those kings he should conquer. He had calculated with the grand-master of his wardrobe that a full royal cloak would require forty beards: he had already vanquished five kings, and reckoned on a sixth beard from the chin of Laodogant. Arthur and his knights totally deranged this calculation by defeating King Ryon. Laodogant, in return for the assistance he had received, offered his daughter, the celebrated Geneura, in marriage to Arthur. Merlin, however, who does not appear to have been a flattering courtier, and who does not seem to have attached to the conservation of Laodogant's beard the importance that it merited, declared that his master must first deserve the princess."

San-Marte pointed out a Celtic legend in which King Rion and his mantle are referred to.<sup>1</sup>

3. Most of the other incidents of the chapter are evident inventions or combinations. The details of the battles are much the same throughout the romance, and call for no especial attention. The second Gonnore seems to be a mere variant of the first, and to owe her existence to the ingenuity of the romancer.<sup>2</sup>

It may, perhaps, be going too far to see in the substitution of the false Gonnore for the queen a recollection of the legend of Charlemagne's mother, Berte, whose place was usurped, as the story goes, by her servant Aliste; but there is considerable similarity in the two accounts. (Cf. L. Gautier, Chanson de Roland, p. 357; Dunlop's Hist. of Fiction, revised edition, ii. p. 446.)

4. By the reference to the Holy Grail (p. 229) we are taken into another cycle of legend; while the introduction of the nephew of the Emperor of Constantinople (p. 230, cf. p. 186) is one of several proofs of the influence of oriental material on our romance.<sup>1</sup> This young man figures in many other Arthurian romances.

CHAPTER XV.

For this chapter we can scarcely hope to find a definite source. The actual wars with the Saxons doubtless gave rise to Celtic traditions which were handed on with endless permutations of essentially the same incidents; but the general similarity of the various battles warns us not to look for the source of more than an occasional name or incident.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTERS XVI., XVII., XVIII.

In these chapters we find a host of easily manufactured incidents, of which I can cite but a few. Seigramor is again brought in (p. 259), but no especially striking motive is introduced. On p. 262 sqq. Merlin appears in the guise of an old man. This transformation may be compared with that in Robert de Borron's Merlin (p. 72). On p. 263, the old man calls Gawain a coward. The same incident in another form reappears a little later (p. 297). Other parallels suggest themselves, as, for example, p. 279, where Merlin appears disguised as a churl, much the same as on p. 167.

CHAPTER XIX.

1. In this chapter the romancer doubtless makes use of older materials, considerably modified to suit his needs. The prophecies (p. 304 sqq.) seem to have been suggested by the similar prophecies of Geoffrey's Historia, book vii.

2. The meeting of Merlin and Nimiane is here detailed in a form that does not recur in the other romances. As is well known, Malory (iv. 1) identifies the maiden whom Merlin loved with one of the ladies of the lake. Her name appears in various forms, easily explicable when one takes account of the confusion in the MSS. of the letters u and n and m. The original Celtic character underwent a variety of transformations at the hands of the romancers, who combined and differentiated the original legends with little regard for consistency. We may be somewhat surprised to find Rhÿs identifying Nimiane with Morgain le Fee, but of the justice of this there can be little question.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf. G. Paris, Merlin, Introd. p. lxxv. Rhÿs, Studies in the Arthurian Legend, pp. 284, 348, compares Nimiane with Rhiannon, wife of PwyH. Cf. also Nutt's Studies on the Legend of the Holy Grail, p. 232, my discussion of the Vita Merlini, and Sommer's Morte Darthur, vol. iii. p. 117 sqq. Cf. also Grimm, Deutsche Mythologie (4th ed.), pp. 342, 533, 685; n. 117, 128; Dunlop's Hist. of Fiction (1888), i. 186, note.

<sup>2</sup> "Manni, in his Ist. del Decam. ii. 97, cites an anonymous MS. where it is said that Boccaccio's story [of a garden produced by enchantment: Decam. Giorn. x.] is found in a collection much older than his time, and adds that Giovanni Tritemio relates how a Jewish physician, in the year 876, caused by enchantment a splendid garden to appear, with trees and flowers in full bloom, in mid-winter. A similar exploit is credited to Albertus Magnus in the thirteenth century. The notion seems to have been brought to Europe from the East, where stories of saints, dervishes, or jogis performing such wonders have been common time out of mind."—Originals and Analogues of some of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, part iv. (1886), p. 332, note.

they belong to the familiar tricks of the mediaeval 'tregetours,' referred to by Chaucer in the House of Fame, book iii., and in the Frankeleyns Tale.<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER XX.

1. This chapter affords scarcely any really new material; for the interminable details of the hand-to-hand conflicts are essentially repetitions, with slight increment, of the details of the preceding battles.

2. Merlin's prophecies here deserve as little attention as the prophecies of the preceding chapter. Guyomar is a disguised form of "Guigemar for Guihomarc[h]us."<sup>2</sup> He is here introduced (p. 316) for the first time, but he reappears later in the story (p. 507 sqq.).

3. The account of Nascien (pp. 326, 327) borrows hints from the Grail legend.<sup>3</sup>

4. Merlin's enchantments are of a piece with those in the previous battles. The pretty little scene where Gonnore arms her lover Arthur (pp. 322, 323) is probably the invention of the romancer; as is also the scene where King Leodegan falls on his knee before his steward Cleodalis, and asks pardon for the wrongs he has committed against him.

CHAPTER XXI.

1. The chapter opens with the enchantments of Guynebens (pp. 361-363), which are essentially the same as those of Merlin<sup>4</sup> (p. 309). Here, as elsewhere, the romancer returns several times upon his tracks.

2. A considerable part of the chapter is devoted to the invented details of battles; but the finding of the treasure (p. 370), and the meeting of Arthur with Gawain and the children (p. 371 sqq.), may go back to a somewhat older account. Of course, there is nothing especially striking in any of these incidents; but Gawain is the theme of such a multitude of traditions, some of which are certainly Celtic, that we make no improbable supposition in thinking that the tradition is in this case older than the romance.

CHAPTER XXII.

This chapter appears to contain little else than mere padding. There is the same familiar fighting, there are the usual enchantments by Merlin, the same fiery dragon (pp. 393, 406), but new motives are conspicuously absent. The introduction of the Romans anticipates the more striking account in chap. xxxii., which follows with considerable variation Geoffrey of Monmouth's story of the battles of Arthur with the Romans.

CHAPTER XXIII.

This chapter contains three leading incidents—the dreams of King Ban and his wife; Merlin's visit to his love; and, lastly, the dream of Julius Caesar, Emperor of Rome, with the adventures of Grisandol.

1. The motive of the first set of dreams is familiar enough to warrant us in regarding them as inventions of the redactor.

2. Merlin's visit to his love possesses the mysterious charm that appears everywhere in Celtic legend; and I cannot help believing that this incident is essentially of Celtic origin, though I can find no earlier version than in the Merlin.

3. The last incident appears to combine a variety of different elements. In the appearance of Merlin as a savage we have, perhaps, a lingering tradition originally relating to Myrddin the Bard. In the repeated laughs of Merlin we have reproduced in varied form motives appearing in chap. ii. Merlin's laugh when brought before the Emperor of Rome (p. 432)<sup>1</sup> parallels the third laugh of Merlin in the romance of Arthour and Merlin; only there it is Vortigern who takes the place of the Emperor, and the setting is different. We may compare, too, the somewhat similar incident in the Vita Merlini (ll. 253-294). Merlin is taken and bound. Suddenly he laughs as the queen passes through the hall, and the king picks a leaf out of her hair; but the bard refuses to tell why he has laughed unless he is set at liberty. Rodarchus orders it to be done. Then Merlin explains that the king is more faithful to the queen than she to him.<sup>2</sup>

One motive of the incident of the twelve disguised chamberlains appears in a modified form in the Roman des Sept Sages, but the hint was probably borrowed from the Merlin.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> M. Gaston Paris (Roman des Sept Sages de Rome, Introd. pp. xxxvii., xxxviii.) remarks on this incident—"Quant au dénouement de ce long drame à tiroirs, le traducteur a cru le rendre plus intéressant et plus moral en ajoutant à la faute de l'impératrice envers son beau-fils un autre crime, son adultère habituel avec un ribaud habillé en femme. Le fonds de cette addition malencontreuse n'est pas d'ailleurs de son invention: il la prise dans le roman de Merlin, en l'adouciissant toutefois un peu; car ce n'est pas un seul ribaud que Merlin sait découvrir parmi les femmes de l'épouse de Jules-César, ce sont les douze chambrières de l'impératrice qui sont des hommes travestis." M. Paris adds in a footnote—"Voyez sur ce recit et les rapprochements auxquels il prête les articles de MM. Liebrecht et Benfey, Orient und Occident, t. i. p. 341, etc. Cette histoire a passé, sous forme de nouvelle, dans le recueil de Nicolas de Troyes, le Grand Parangon des nouvelles nouvelles, où elle est la cxxiv<sup>e</sup> du second volume, le seul conservé. Mabille ne la pas admise dans le choix qu'il a publié dans la Bibliothèque elzévirienne (1869); mais

CHAPTER XXIV.

All the incidents of this chapter appear to be invented; but the names recur elsewhere than in the Merlin.

CHAPTER XXV.

1. The central incident of this chapter is the marriage of Arthur with Gonnore. There is little to add to what has been already remarked. The original hint is, of course, taken from Geoffrey of Monmouth (ix. 9). In Geoffrey's account Arthur marries Guanhamara after he has subdued the Saxons, and he is not crowned till after all his conquests that occur before the war with the Romans.

2. As an instance of the habit of the romancers to make a motive go as far as possible, we may note that in the tournament at Toraise, after Arthur's marriage, Gawain lays about him with a spar of oak, and stops only when Merlin tells him he has done enough (p. 461). In the tournament at Logres, Gawain repeats the same performance with an apple-tree club (p. 493).<sup>1</sup>

3. The story of the false Gonnore is in its details the invention of the romancer, but some of the material is doubtless not due to him. We find that the trouble which il l'avait imprimée dans une première publication, parue à Bruxelles et Paris in 1862; elle y porte le n° lxii.: c'est un extrait textuel du roman." Cf. also P. Paris, Romans de la Table Ronde, ii. 44; Dunlop's Hist. of Fiction (1888), i. 459-461; Meyer, Indogermanische Mythen, i. 153, 154. A. Vesselovsky has attempted to show that "the whole legend of Merlin is based upon the apocryphal history of Solomon"<sup>a</sup> and Martolf, but the case cannot be said to be made out, although there are undoubted parallels at more than one point.

the false Gonnore made for the Queen is related in Lancelot,<sup>1</sup> where is recounted the banishment of Gonnore<sup>2</sup> and the story of Bertelak. The putting of Britain under an interdict, as well as the malady of the false Gonnore, is touched upon (iv. 191). How old the story is, may not be easy to determine, but it seems to be in its essentials older than the Book of Arthur.

CHAPTER XXVI.

In this chapter there appears to be very little but invention. But at the very beginning (pp. 470, 471) is the banishment of Bertelak, just referred to; and on p. 484 is the admirable portrait of Dagenet the Fool (pp. 483, 484), who seems to be an old type. One may easily suspect that the romancer was drawing this character from life.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1. The references at the beginning of this chapter to the Holy Grail may be left for explanation to those who have traced the origin of that legend.

2. The leading theme of the chapter is the mission of King Loth and his four sons to the rebel kings.<sup>3</sup> In Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 337 the account runs parallel with our version as far as p. 509, l. 7. After that point the French version that is followed by the English translator seems to be almost entirely independent of the version in MS. 337. We may suppose that the later redactor drew freely upon his imagination for details, though he possibly had an older account to guide him in the general course of the story. To follow out the details is quite beyond my purpose.

3. In the references to Pelles and his son (p. 520 sqq.) we are again taken into the Grail cycle.<sup>1</sup>

4. For an account of Morgain the reader is referred to chap. xix.

CHAPTERS XXVIII, XXIX.

1. These chapters are filled almost entirely with invented details, playing upon material much older than our romance. Gawain—the Walgan of Geoffrey of Monmouth—here assumes especial prominence, and this he keeps till the close of the romance.

2. The mysterious rubbish uttered by Merlin to Blase (p. 563) affords a not too distant parallel to Merlin's prophecies in Geoffrey's Historia, book vii.; while the ideal which Merlin sets up for the knight who is to achieve a great work—that he be chaste and the best knight in the world—is the leading motive of the Quest of the Holy Grail.

3. The account of Elizer, son of King Pelles of Lytenoys, and “nevewe to the kynge pellenor and to the kynge Alain” (p. 583), takes us again into the Grail cycle.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTER XXX.

The adventure of Ban and Bors at the castle of Agravadain (again taken up in chap. xxxiii. pp. 671–675), while hardly fit for a drawing-room story, is certainly related in most decorous style. The exact source is doubtful, though in the mediation of Merlin, in the use of enchantment, and in the innocence of the maiden, there is at least a reminder of the amour of Uter with Ygerne. In certain slight particulars there is a parallel to this incident in the Chevalier au Lyon of Chrestien de Troyes. Very possibly the incident in the Book of Arthur is borrowed from the Lancelot, for we read (p. 610, l. 24) that the "maiden hadde conceyved a sone, of whom launcelot after hadde grete ioye and honour for the bounte and Chiualrie that was in him." We may note, too, that in the Book of Agravain, towards the end of the Lancelot, we have a somewhat similar incident, though with widely different details. Lancelot is overcome by a philtre, and passes the night with Helene, daughter of King Pelles, supposing her to be the queen Guenever. The old Brisane, governess of the princess, is the go-between, and the child afterwards born is Galahad.<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER XXXI.

Nothing in this chapter calls for especial attention, except the story of King Rion, which has been already discussed (chap. xiv.). Merlin's various disguises really introduce no new motive, though the account of Merlin as a harper (p. 615) is one of the most beautiful bits of description in the entire romance (cf. p. 294).

CHAPTER XXXII.

1. On the vision of Flualis, P. Paris remarks<sup>2</sup> that it contains nothing Welsh or Breton. The "arrangers" found the story, he thinks, in some special lai, and united it as well as they could with the main recital. There is no evidence that the story was treated in a lai, though there can be no question that the vision is not the invention of the romancer.

2. Merlin's visit to Nimiane is another touch of the Celtic legend, which we find reappearing every now and then throughout the romance. What Merlin teaches Nimiane may be compared with what he teaches Morgain le Fee.

3. The interesting story of the maiden and the dwarf is not improbably older than the time of the composition of the Book of Arthur, but I cannot point out the original source.

4. The general course of the war with the Romans is evidently suggested by Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia (ix. 15 to x. 13), though there are differences enough. It is not certain, however, that the redactor went directly to the Latin. Wace's Brut (l. 10,999) adds to Geoffrey's account the fact that, after the Emperor's letter is read, Arthur protects the messengers from the rage of the Britons. The same incident recurs in the English version (p. 640). On the other hand, the speeches by Hoel and Augusel, though reproduced by Wace, are here omitted, while Cadur's is given.

5. Arthur's dream may be compared with that recounted by Geoffrey (x. 2).

6. The fight with the Giant of Mount St. Michel is much the same in Geoffrey (x. 3) and in the romance (pp. 645-649). Bedver accompanies Arthur in each case. The maiden is in each version the niece of Hoel. The romancer, then, borrowed the story more or less directly from Geoffrey, but Geoffrey is hardly to be regarded as the original inventor. Paulin Paris suggests<sup>1</sup> that the exact designation of the locality would seem to make credible a Breton origin for the legend; but that, on the other hand, the outlines of the story are in some respects similar to those of the legend of Cacus,<sup>2</sup> who was killed by Hercules—

- (1) Cacus and the giant (in Geoffrey) both come from Spain.
- (2) The flames that Cacus breathes correspond to the fires on the mountain.
- (3) The bellowing of cattle shows where Cacus is; the cries of the nurse discover the giant.
- (4) Both live at the top of a mountain.
- (5) Both are blinded by a stroke of their enemy.

Not impossibly the somewhat forced resemblances just noted indicate a closer relationship of the two legends than appears to me probable. M. Paris also calls attention to M. Breal's study of the mythological origin of Cacus, and the possibility that an analogous tradition could have penetrated into several stories. The Celts, like the Etruscans, could have their giant, the scourge of the country, from which a hero would deliver them.<sup>1</sup>

7. In Geoffrey's Historia (x. 11) and in the romance, Walgan (Gawain) performs prodigies of valour, and at last kills the Emperor Lucius (Merlin, p. 663). Arthur sends the Emperor's body to Rome, with the taunt that such was the tribute that the Britons paid.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTER XXXIII.

This final chapter contains a variety of incidents drawn from various sources.

1. The first incident is the very singular fight which King Arthur has with the great cat of the "Lac de Losane." Mr. Phillimore has suggested to me a possible Celtic source, but I must leave the investigation in that field to him and other Celtic specialists.

Through the courtesy of M. Paul Meyer, Director of the École des Chartes in Paris, my attention was directed to a short paper on this incident by Prof. F. Novati, of Milan, who very kindly sent me a copy.<sup>1</sup> The following is a translation:—

“In the Merlin we are told how King Arthur, after having conquered the Romans, instead of pushing on as far as Rome and renewing the glory of Berlinus and Brennus, followed the counsel of the prophet, and turned his attention towards freeing Gaul from a monster which spread terror in all the country about Lake Losanne.<sup>2</sup> This monster, this demon, was in fact nothing more than a simple cat, but the battle which the King sustained against him turned out to be more difficult and fierce than the battle with the giant ravisher of the niece of Hoel, Count of Brittany.<sup>3</sup>

“The battle of Arthur against the cat is described not only in the prose Merlin, but also in other texts. Thus, as G. Paris<sup>4</sup> has lately shown, it is referred to in a fragment of a German poem of the twelfth century, evidently drawn from a French source, which the editor has called Manuel und Amande,<sup>5</sup> from the name of the chief characters. The poet, after eulogizing warmly and in detail the valour of Arthur, apparently goes on to narrate his death, and tells us how the occasion of it had been a monster, which was a fish and at the same time had the form of a cat.<sup>6</sup> I say apparently, because the poem is quite obscure, and some verses are lacking.

“This same legend of the death of the valiant British sovereign in consequence of a struggle with a fish-cat (gatto-pesce) is mentioned secondly by a Norman poet, who, however, animated by strong sympathy for England, is indignant at the story, and repudiates it as a fable invented by the French to throw ridicule on the beloved hero of Britain. The verses of André de Coutances have likewise been referred to by Paris, but they are worthy of being quoted entire—

‘ Il ont dit que riens n’a valu,
 Et donc à Arflet n’a chalu
 Que boté fu par Capalu
 Li reis Artu en la palu ;

 Et que le chat l’ocist de guerre,
 Puis passa outre en Engleterre,
 E ne fu pas lenz de conquerre,
 Ainz porta corone en la terre,

 E fu sire de la contrée.
 Où ont itel fable trovée ?
 Mençonge est, Dex le sot, provée
 Onc greignor ne fu encontrée.’<sup>1</sup>

“Paris seems inclined to believe that Capalu is the name of the portentous cat. If such be the case, he concludes, we have here the monster of the same name which appears in the Bataille Loquifer, and which has precisely the head of a cat, the feet of a dragon, the body of a horse, and the tail of a lion.<sup>2</sup>

“This identification of the cat of Losanne with Capalu, or Chapalu, which, however, Paris does not insist on strongly, raises in my opinion difficulties which are, or which seem to me to be, insurmountable. I believe, indeed, that André de Coutances, in the verses which I have quoted, alludes not to one but to two stories, which if they were not invented by the French, as he seems to believe, were transformed and altered by them so as to ridicule the inhabitants of England by abasing Arthur. We have to do, then, with two adventures of Arthur, entirely independent of each other; with two battles undertaken against two different monsters, battles which had, however, the same disastrous results for the sovereign of Britain, since in the struggle with Chapalu he was worsted and was drowned in a marsh, and in that with the cat he lost his life. And that this is really the state of affairs, will become evident when we come to verify the difference between Chapalu and the cat of Losanne.

“If, as Paris saw clearly, the former is to be identified with the Chapalu of the Bataille Loquifer, it belongs to the category of fantastic monsters which result from the gathering together of members taken from various animals—to the family, that is, at the head of which is the chimaera. But the Cat of Losanne is something quite different. It is neither more nor less than a cat, but a cat which has attained dimensions far beyond those of ordinary cats, and is endowed with an extraordinary strength and a frightful ferocity. But how and why? We find this how and why described in the most satisfactory manner in a passage of Tristan de Nanteuil, in which the poet is pleased to explain to his hearers the superhuman strength which his hero possessed, and that not less wondrous strength with which the hind was endowed that had nourished him with her milk—

D’une seraine fut, sy com l’istioire crie.
Il est de tel vertu et de tel seignorie
Que se beste en a beu elle devient fournye,
Si grande et si poissant, nel tenés [à folye],
Que nul ne dure à lui, tant ait chevalerie.

Artus le nous aprouve, qui taut ot baronnnye,
 Car au temps qu'i regna, pour voir le vous affie,
 Se combata au chat qu'alecta en sa vie
 Du let d'une seraine qui en mer fut peschie;
 Mès le chat devint tel, ne vous mentiray mye,
 Que nuls homs ne duroit en la soye partie
 Qu'i ne meist affin, à duel et à hachie.
 Artus le conquesta par sa bachelerie,
 Mais ains l'acheta cher, sy con l'istoire crye.'<sup>1</sup>

"This passage from Tristan de Nanteuil is, then, of great interest for the solution of our little problem. It enables us, in fact, to dispel every doubt concerning the nature of the animal under whose claws perished the most valiant of kings, if we believe the legend preserved by the author of Manuel und Amande<sup>2</sup> and indignantly repudiated by André de Coutances. The multiform Chapalu of the Bataille Loquifer has no connection with this monstrous cat, which a fisherman has thoughtlessly nourished with the milk of a siren. In the second place the author of Tristan calls our attention to the fact that the primitive legend of Arthur and the Cat is quite different from that narrated in the Merlin, where the appearance of the demon cat is a visitation of the wrath of God, who wishes to punish a fisherman who had failed to

<sup>1</sup> P. Meyer, Notice sur le roman de Tristan de Nanteuil in Jahrb. für Rom. und Engl. Liter. ix. p. 11; and cf. p. 8, where the poet narrates at length how a siren suckled Tristan at sea, who on account of this nourishment became great as un cheval de Chartage. The idea of making Tristan and the hind drink the milk of the siren must have been suggested to the author by reading a romance of the Arthurian cycle, in which it was told that Arthur had come to blows with the cat, but had been able to conquer him. From this source he must also have drawn what he narrates of the first bloody deeds perpetrated by the hind on the fisherman who had received Tristan and on his family. The diabolical cat does the same thing in the Merlin. (P. Paris, op. cit. p. 360.)

“That a British or French fisherman should find a siren in his nets will not surprise anyone who remembers how the classic temptresses of Ulysses had preserved their habit of alluring seamen, even in the Middle Ages. Gervase of Tilbury declares that they often appeared in the British Sea.<sup>2</sup> But neither Gervase nor other writers consulted by me say that the milk of the sirens had such prodigious virtue as is attributed to them in the story of the cat and of the hind who nursed Tristan. Perhaps others better versed than I in Bestiaries will succeed in finding some reference to the subject.”

2. If we pass over the continuation of the stories of Agravadain and Flualis, we come to the wonderfully poetic legend of the magic imprisonment of Merlin.<sup>3</sup> The groundwork of this legend is probably Celtic, though we cannot

As pointed out in the discussion of Malory's Morte Darthur (p. lxx., ante), the version there given differs from ours. The heading of book iv. chap. 1 reads—“How merlyn was affotted & dooted on one of the ladyes of the lake / and how he was shytte in a rocke vnder a stone and there deyed capitulo primo.” Malory calls her “Nyneue.”

In the romance of Ysaie le Triste the fairies “announced that they frequently resorted to the bush which confined the magician Merlin, with whom they had lately enjoyed a full conversation on the merits of different knights, and other important affairs of chivalry.”—Dunlop, Hist. of Fiction (1888), i. pp. 213, 214.

“We are told in the romance of Lancelot du Lac, that Merlin was confined by his mistress in the forest of Darnant, ‘qui marcheoit a la mer de Cornouailles et a la mer de Sorelloys.’”—Ibid. i. p. 239.

In the Ancient Scottish Prophecies we learn that—

“Meruelous Merling is wasted away

With a wicked woman, woe might shee be;

First printed 1503. Reprinted for Ballantyne Club, 1833, and by F. Michel, Vita Merlini (p. 80), 1837.

point definitely to, an actual Celtic source. We find in a late Triad<sup>1</sup> a story of Merlin entering into the Glass House in Bardsey with his nine bards, bearing with them the thirteen treasures of Britain, and never being heard of afterwards.<sup>2</sup> We may compare, too, the passages in Plutarch (quoted in Rhys's Studies, p. 368): "Moreover, there is there [around Britain], they said, an island in which Chronus is imprisoned with Briareus, keeping guard over him as he sleeps; for, as they put it, sleep is the bond forged for Chronus." Nimiane's persistent teasing finds its parallel in the story of Samson and Delilah, but we can easily make too much of such resemblances.<sup>3</sup>

3. The remainder of the chapter doubtless rests in part upon older recitals; but in its present form the conclusion is the work of the redactors. As already noted, the conclusion of the romance is differently given in Bib. Nat. MS. fr. 98 (which appends the Prophecies), and in the printed edition of 1498. The material of the romance was very flexible in the hands of the remodellers. Very probably they would have been more puzzled than we to give an account of their sources. No doubt the conclusion was modified by the Lancelot, which is frequently placed in the manuscripts directly after the Merlin.

<sup>3</sup> Brunetto Latino, in his Li Livres dou Trésor (pub. by Chabaille, Paris, 1862), mentions prophecies of Merlin, and he evidently knew Geoffrey of Monmouth. Aristotle, he says, was betrayed by woman's wiles, like Merlin. Quoted in Jahrbücher für Philologie und Paedagogik, vol. xcii. pp. 283 and 290.

X.

THE LITERARY VALUE OF THE MERLIN.

WE have seen that the English Merlin is nothing but a close and almost servile translation of the French Merlin ordinaire. Consequently, the only thing for which the unknown maker of the English version can be held responsible is the quality of his translation. The real criticism of the Merlin as a work of literary art must be directed to the French original.

Our investigation of the manuscripts and of the sources has shown that the French Merlin is made up of a variety of originally unrelated parts, of very unequal merit. To estimate the Merlin accurately, we should, therefore, have to disentangle out of the congeries of romances the several elements, and look at them separately. If we deal with the completed romance, we simply have to consider the work as it left the hands of the compilers and arrangers. The defects lie on the surface. The romance is a model of nearly all the faults of construction so lavishly exhibited in most of the mediaeval prose romances. According to nineteenth-century notions, the story is intolerably long and prolix. We are treated to far too many incidents of the same sort. We yawn in the midst of the confused and painfully circumstantial battles, as we learn for the hundredth time that Arthur, or Gawain, or Loth, slit some one to the teeth, and are credibly assured that there were shouts "and stour and ffuht grete crakke, and noyse ther was of brekyng of speres, and stif strokes of swerdes vpon helmes." Of course, elements much the same almost necessarily entered into all descriptions of mediaeval battles, but that is scarcely an excuse for spreading the account over scores of pages. In the Merlin as we now have it, perspective and proportion are entirely disregarded. The story is not an organic whole, in which a germinal motive is developed with logical sequence, and made to control the action of the collective mass: it is rather a loose and inartistic combination of fragments essentially unrelated. Many of the episodes might be dropped altogether, without causing the slightest break in the narrative. Some of these episodes, we must admit, are in themselves interesting, but they stand in no organic relation to the romance as a whole. In other words, there is little or no plot in our sense of that term. The Merlin proper—which occupies the first seventh of the romance—is, indeed, simple and reasonably definite in its aim. The beginning is dramatic and impressive, and the conclusion has a poetic beauty felt by every reader. We lose sight of Merlin before the coronation of Arthur; but we may suppose—if we assume the prose Perceval to be based on the work of Robert de Borron—that the author imagined he had given sufficient prominence to Merlin by introducing him again in the Perceval immediately after the coronation. What Robert had further to tell he narrated in the modest limits which he assigned to the Perceval, the original continuation of the versified romance of Merlin. When, however, the original continuation was discarded by the later prose romancers, loose rein was given to invention and unintelligent combination.

The framework borrowed from Geoffrey of Monmouth was itself loose enough to admit of any amount of insertion and omission. Naturally enough, we are puzzled to decide who is really the hero of the last six hundred pages. Merlin is plainly the centre of interest in the first hundred pages; but after that point we lose sight of Merlin altogether, except at comparatively rare intervals. He is the deus ex machina who descends to extricate some one whom the romancer would not willingly let die, but he is by no means the character to whom our attention is steadily directed. Our interest is demanding for Arthur and his friends, for Gawain and his circle, for King Loth and his sons, and numerous other characters.

No principle of subordination or of proportion of parts appears to have guided the romancers. The story runs on according to its own sweet will, or, rather, according to the sweet will of the various literary blunderers who put their hands to the work. As far as we can see, it might run on for ever by the easy process of multiplying the battles and borrowing incidents wherever found unclaimed. There are, of course, passages of rare beauty from the mysterious legend of Merlin, which in a certain nameless charm are scarcely surpassed in the whole range of mediaeval romance. But these are buried under a mass of rubbish as formless and unattractive as rubbish can well be, even in a mediaeval romance. We need not, however, imagine that the romancers were seriously distressed at the thought that their additions to the story might be incongruous. The artistic sense in most of the mediaeval story-tellers was sadly awry. They seem to have regarded it as a literary crime to leave the most trivial detail to the imagination of the reader. We may admit freely the beauty of all the passages that anyone wishes to select, but we shall have to confess that we at last weary a little of the endless and desultory babbling of a story-teller, who, to borrow Trollope's phrase, writes because he has to tell a story rather than because he has a story to tell. The materials of the Merlin might have been wrought into a tragedy of wonderful power and beauty; but the lack of artistic grouping allows the fragments to sweep along confusedly, like blocks of drift-ice in a river. All are moving in one general direction, but they are not bound together by any laws of connection.

An almost necessary consequence of this looseness of plot is the abruptness of transition. The favourite formula is—

"But now resteth to speke of hem at this time and telleth of King Arthur," or Gonnore, or Gawain, or anyone else that the whim of the romancer suggests. Paulin Paris commended this feature as indicating progress in the art of narration, but I question whether most readers will share his pleasure.

It follows from what has been urged, that we must lay aside all hope of discovering in the Merlin any underlying moral purpose. The story is not made to prove any doctrine of religion, or morals, or politics. All of the characters are assumed to be good Catholics, unless they are specifically mentioned as heathen or Saracens. Their morals are tolerably decent, according to the standards of the time; and occasionally we even get an incidental bit of moral suggestion. But the fact which most strikes a careful reader is, that the character of Merlin has not altogether improved in the slipshod process of development followed in the romance. The dignity of the boy-prophet, as he summons the trembling counsellors and expounds easily what had baffled the clerks, compels a certain sort of admiration. Even when he participates in the plot which results in the birth of Arthur, we look upon him as a grave and judicious adviser. But after the coronation of Arthur, though Merlin still plays the rôle of sage and prophet, and figures in more than one scene full of a strange beauty, we cannot but feel that he is too often degraded to the level of the mountebank and the juggler.

As we read the romance we cannot but be impressed with the fact that most of the characters are unskilfully drawn. The old romancers seem to have been able to imagine but one trait of character at a time, and they display a signal inability to follow out a complicated analysis. The natural result is a remarkable similarity and conventionality in the figures that crowd the page. Instead of delineating the characters by a combination of fine touches, the romancers lay on the colours in broad lines, with little or no attempt at artistic discrimination. The characters are not developed as in Shakspeare's plays and in the best modern novels, but are presented about as complete at the beginning of the romance as at the end. Some characters almost appear to have been invented for the express purpose of giving sufficient exercise in the use of the superlative.

That this method of treatment is painfully superficial and external, needs no proof; but it is the method of the Merlin. It is, indeed, a striking fact that, although the romance contains much that is mysterious, it contains little that is really profound. The story is a singular mixture of the plain and simple and of the dark and mysterious. The knights and ladies discuss little except love and chivalry and war, and the passing questions of the day. They seem to have troubled themselves scarcely at all with such great problems of life as meet us in the novels of George Eliot, and there is little reason why they should. Theirs was an age of faith, and they did not have to grope in darkness and doubt. Their passions were the simple elementary passions of love, hate, jealousy. Their virtues were the simple virtues of bravery, sincerity, courtesy, generosity. We are almost led to think, therefore, because we are told so much about these men and women, and their characters are apparently so transparent, that we know them; but we never succeed in lifting the veil that hides their inner lives. We catch glimpses now and then of a background of mystery in the strange life of Merlin—most of all when we see the magic spell stealing upon him as gently as music breathes across a bank of violets—but even then we are not allowed to gaze into the depths of the great magician's heart; and we close the book with the feeling that between us and the men and women of the romance is a great gulf fixed, which we must cross before we can know them as they are.

We have sufficiently dealt with the more serious faults in the Merlin. We may now bestow a word upon the literary style of the romancers who pieced together the story. Here, too, their work is faulty enough. They have not yet learned how to write a neat and well-balanced prose. Their sentences lack unity; their pronouns have a bewildering vagueness of reference; their paragraphs lack movement and artistic balance. The connection is of the loosest sort, and is helped out by an excessive use of the conjunction and. Yet the style at times has a grace and harmony, as well as an air of distinction, not unworthy of the aristocratic circle for which the romance was intended. Even the amorous adventures are related in a tone of high breeding that relieves the artistic conscience, if not the moral sense. Some of the descriptions are charmingly poetic, and are ablaze with light and colour. There is, indeed, a touch of conventionality in many of the descriptions of natural scenery, but even here the mediaeval naïveté lends a freshness and beauty that are always engaging. Vivacity is secured by frequent dialogue. Then, too, the air of verisimilitude is almost perfect. Detail is heaped upon detail, until the realistic effect is irresistible. We may feel that the art is defective, but we must admit that art itself cannot make the narrative seem more real.

We may find still other excuses for the Merlin. We have been testing the romance by the literary standards of the nineteenth century. If, however, we judge it by the literary standards of seven centuries ago, we ought perhaps to soften our criticism of more than one passage that now seems insufferably tedious. In those days of few books most readers were doubtless glad to have the story drawn out as far as possible. Even the accounts of the battles, which no one now reads except the editor, the printer, and the proof-reader, may have been among the most valued portions of the work. We may thus develop a spirit of charitable judgment otherwise quite beyond us. And yet, in our most charitable moments we may hesitate to believe that the Merlin was accepted as a finished specimen of literary art even in the Middle Ages: an age that possessed the work of Chrestien de Troyes and Walter Map was not so devoid of literary sense as to be unaware of the more glaring defects of such a composite romance as the Merlin.

Considered as a picture of chivalry the Merlin has for us a permanent value. It gives us more than one vivid glimpse of the every-day life of the period to which it belongs. The deeds of Arthur and his knights are transferred to the time of chivalry, and illuminated with all the light and colour of that picturesque age. If we count this of small importance, we can take some satisfaction that in the Merlin we have a book of the deepest interest to the Europe of six or seven centuries ago, and that as we read we can imagine more clearly the ideals of an age profoundly important in the development of our modern civilization.

As regards the work of the English translator, we have, perhaps, sufficiently touched upon that in our study of the manuscripts. Most of his translation is a mechanical jog-trot that follows every turn of the original. He freely uses French terms, and transfers French constructions, and even entire French sentences, to the English page. His sentences are in the main the sentences of the original, with all their faults of confusion and overcrowding. Yet the style has numerous distinct excellences. The diction is often direct and vigorous, and invariably escapes the turgid inflation so characteristic of English prose a little more than a century later. The period to which the translation belongs was singularly barren in works of creative imagination, and could not very consistently have made unfavourable reflections upon the unknown scholar who toiled through the heavy task. His achievement is hardly worthy to be placed beside the masterpiece of Malory; but it has an interest all its own, and it may well be valued as a not insignificant monument of old English prose.

XI.

The English manuscript from which the prose romance is printed, is described in the "Advertisement" to Part i. of the Merlin (E.E.T.S. Lond. 1865). A fragment of another version is contained in a single folio leaf of a fifteenth-century paper manuscript in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. The passage corresponds to p. 315, l. 15 to p. 317, l. 24. Kölbing gives the variants, and decides that the Oxford fragment cannot be a copy of the Cambridge MS.<sup>1</sup>

I find also in the Catalogue of the Ashmolean MSS. (802: 4), Oxford, the following notice of a manuscript of Merlin contained "In a collection of Apocryphal tracts, genealogical and heraldic collections, astrological observations, and miscellaneous; by Simon Forman, M.D.": — "The first 32 chapters of a Romance of the life of Merlin, beginning thus: 'The Parliament and consultation of the Devils, and their decree about the begetting of Merlin, about the year of Christ 445.'" (Fo. 66-82.) The last is thus entitled: "Cap. 32. How Merlin told the Hermit who was his father, and entreated him to write this book of his life and others of his works that should follow, and how the Hermit Blase did conjure him by the name of God, being much afearred of him."<sup>2</sup> (Fo. 81b.) "Forman designed to write Cap. 33, but left this copy unfinished, and seven blank leaves follow." (Catal. p. 443).

<sup>2</sup> I have modernized the spelling, as I suspect that I did not verify my transcript at the time I made it.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

It may be proper to observe that pages 1 to cl have been in print since the summer of 1892. Hence the changes that have been made in those pages are only such as could be made without too great a disturbance of the text. In the remainder of the book, notice has been taken of the more important recent literature on the Merlin legend. This appears chiefly in Section VIII.

I take this opportunity to express my renewed thanks to Mr. H. L. D. Ward for his great kindness in going through the proof-sheets and making several valuable suggestions.

p. XIII. 1893. Ward, H. L. D.—Lailoken (or Merlin Silvester), Romania, 1893, pp. 504–526.—This article I have been able to use in Section VIII. as it was passing through the press.

p. XIII. 1894. Richter, G.—Beiträge zur Erklärung und Textkritik des mittellenglischen Prosaromans von Merlin, Erste Hälfte. (Diss.) Altenburg, 1894. Reprinted in Englische Studien, xx. pp. 347–377.—The author attempts a critical reconstruction of the English text of our romance by the aid of the French version. The work is so carefully done that one can only regret that it rests for the most part upon a late print of the French text (1528), rather than upon the MSS.

p. XIII. 1894. Sommer, H. O.—Le Roman de Merlin. London.—This edition of the French Roman de Merlin is a reproduction in ordinary type of the British Museum MS. Add. 10,292. This book was not accessible to me until after my entire discussion was in print and the “revise” had been returned to the printers. The editor describes the MS. fully, gives its history, and prints a table indicating the relation of the Arthurian MSS. in the British Museum to MSS. Add. 10,292–10,294. His discussion of the text is very brief, and touches only the salient points connected with its development. On p. xxvi., note, he calls attention to a MS. of Merlin not mentioned in Ward’s Catalogue of Romances. This is Add. 32,125 in the British Museum, dating from the beginning of the fourteenth century. It contains the Saint Graal (“complete save as to one leaf”) and the Merlin. Sommer remarks that this MS. “is as valuable and interesting as No. 747 of the Bibliothèque Nationale, but the latter is better written.”

p. LIV. In 1892 appeared a novel by Paul Heyse entitled Merlin. The story is not a reproduction of the old legend, but is essentially a nineteenth-century novel with here and there a motive, or at least a hint, drawn from the mediaeval romance. Cf. a paper in The Atlantic Monthly, March, 1893.

p. LIV. note 3. Goldmark's opera appeared in 1886.

p. LXVIII. l. 9. As an interesting proof of Merlin's fame as a prophet, we may note that Defoe, in his account of the great plague in London in 1665, says that fortune-tellers and prophets greatly flourished at that time, and that they displayed the head of Merlin as a sign.

p. LXXIII. l. 27. The opinion of Merlin held by the antiquary Leland, who busied himself much with the Arthurian legend, is worth quoting:—“Sunt ibi tamen, si quis penitus inspiciat, talia, qualia magno desiderantur antiquae cognitionis incommodo, & quae à Gulielmo lecta, potius quàm intellecta, nullum prae se tulerunt comòdum. Rursus apponam & aliud eiusdem honorificū scilicet, non modò de historiae interprete, verū etiam de Arturio ipso testimonium. p. LXXVII. Blackmore's King Arthur (1697) is an enlargement, in twelve books, of the Prince Arthur.

p. LXXVIII. Bartlett's concordance to Shakespeare notes several references to Merlin.

In the catalogue of a London bookseller (1894) I note the following title: "Merlinus Anglicus Junior, The English Merlin revived, or his prediction upon the affaires of the English Commonwealth. 1644. 4to."

Maccallum, in his Tennyson's Idylls and Arthurian Story, pp. 161-165, calls attention to Fielding's Tragedy of Tragedies, or the Life and Death of Tom Thumb the Great (1730), a burlesque piece in which Merlin is introduced here and there.

Among other eighteenth-century references to Merlin may be noted that in Warton's poem on the Grave of King Arthur (1777).

p. LXXXIII. Bishop Heber made some use of the Merlin legend in his unfinished Masque of Guendolen.

Wordsworth refers briefly to Merlin in one of his sonnets and in his Artegal and Elidure.

Bulwer introduces Merlin into his heroic poem King Arthur (1849), and remarks in the preface: "Merlin . . . is here represented less as the wizard of popular legend, than as the seer gifted with miraculous powers for the service and ultimate victory of Christianity."

Emerson wrote two short poems entitled Merlin, but they scarcely do more than suggest the name of the hero.

Professor John Veitch has made use of Merlin in his poems entitled, Merlin and Other Poems, 1889. These I have not seen.

p. LXXXV. l. 15. My remarks on Nennius were in print before Zimmer's Nennius Vindicatus appeared. His book, it is needless to observe, marks a new epoch in the study of Nennius; but for the purpose of our general discussion, the main point is the one which I have emphasized—the priority by a considerable time of the Hist. Britonum of Nennius over the Hist. Reg. Brit. of Geoffrey of Monmouth. Zimmer assigns the Historia Britonum proper to about the close of the eighth century. See p. 66 seq.

p. LXXXV. l. 19. Zimmer remarks, p. 282: "Die sogenannte eigentliche Historia Brittonum (7-56) ist als Geschichtsquelle absolut werthlos."

p. LXXXIX. Zimmer's date for Geoffrey's Hist. Reg. Brit. is 1132-1135. Cf. Nennius Vindicatus, p. 278.

p. cxxv. See F. Lot's Études sur la Provenance du Cycle Arthurien in the Romania, 1895-96. M. Lot's articles are directed against Zimmer's theory concerning the origin of the Arthurian romances, and conclude as follows: "Après comme avant les travaux du savant celtiste de Greifswald, il paraît évident que l'influence des Celtes insulaires a été beaucoup plus considérable, et même vraiment prépondérante, dans la transmission des éléments du cycle arthurien."

p. CCVI. l. 1. A poem of 504 lines (Lambeth MS. 853, about 1430 A.D.) is called pe Develis Parliament, and describes a scene similar to that in our romance, but with no mention of Merlin.

p. CCVI. l. 12. Leland, in a paper on Etrusco-Roman Remains, published in report of Internat. Folk-Lore Congress for 1891, remarks (p. 192) on the widespread recognition of Dusio in Italian country districts.

p. CCXXIV. Spenser makes use of the story of the beards, F. Q., Bd. vi. c. 1, st. 14 seq., and applies it to Crudor.

In the Norse Saga Þiðriks Konungs af Bern, c. 12, King Samson orders Elsing, Jarl of Bern, to send him, among other things, a dog-collar of gold and a leash made of his own beard.

p. ccxxvii. The game of chess (referred to on p. 362 of the Merlin) was a common diversion in the Middle Ages. See Child's Ballads (large ed.), viii. 454.

p. ccxxix. Meyer, in his Indogermanische Mythen, i. 153, 154, urges the Oriental origin of the Merlin legend, or, at least, after mentioning the pranks of that lively little demon Ashmedai, and bringing them into relation to the Gandharve legends of Indian mythology, he passes to discuss "die aus Indien stammende alt-französische Merlinsage . . . in welcher der wilde Mann Merlin, der erst ungebärdig Speise und Trank umwirft, dann aber nach reichlichem Genuss von Honig, Milch, Warmbier, und Braten einschläft, vom Seneschal des Kaisers gebunden wird und diesem nun die Untreue seiner Frau offenbart, etc." Comparison should also be made with the similar incident in the story of Lailoken, "Part ii. : King Meldred and Lailoken," published in the Romania for 1893, pp. 522-525.

p. ccxxx. Gawain's exploits with the club may be compared with those of Gamelyn with the same weapon. Cf. Skeat's Chaucer, iii. 400. See also Scherer's Gesch. d. deutschen Lit. p. 183.

p. ccxxxv. In Rhys's Preface to Malory's Morte Darthur, pp. xxv., xxviii., xxix., I find the following remarks on a savage cat of Celtic tradition :—"In an obscure 'poem consisting of a dialogue between Arthur and Glewlwyd Gavaelvawr,' occurs at the end of the fragment the following passage, in which Kei is represented as fighting with a great cat :—

Worthy Kei went to Mona
To destroy lions.
His shield was small Against Palug's Cat.
When people shall ask 'Who slew Palug's Cat?'
Nine score . . . .
Used to fall for her food.
Nine score leaders
Used to . . . .

The manuscript is imperfect, and it breaks off just where one should have heard more about Cath Palug, or 'Palug's Cat,' a monster, said in the Red Book Triads to have been reared by the Sons of Palug, in Anglesey."
